Arab Group Claims Job; Second Plane Hit

Swiss Plane Blasted, 47 Killed

February's Bursting Out All Over

Greater Victorians enjoyed springlike weather Saturday as warm sunshine sent thermometers to 55 degrees. Beacon Hill Park crocuses heralded early spring, and golfers at Victoria Golf Club took advantage of it. Anglers, gardeners and home handymen will get another chance to enjoy themselves today when high of 52 degrees is expected. However, weather office forecasts increasing clouds for Monday and even suggests some rain for Tuesday.—(Jim Ryan)

Israelis Angry, Shocked

WUERENLINGEN, Switzerland (UPI) — A Swissair jetliner bound for Tel Aviv was blown up in flight—apparently by Arab guerrillas — moments after taking off Saturday from Zurich's Kloten airport, killing all 47 persons aboard. At least 11 Israelis were among the dead.

An Arab guerrilla organization in Beirut promptly claimed it sabotaged the plane. Swiss authorities, expressing "sorrow and anger," said there was an air explosion before the flaming wreckage of the four-engine Convair Coronado jet plunged to earth in a forest just 200 yards from an atomic reactor and near an ammunition dump.

Swiss federal investigators said there was no sign of a technical fault having caused the explosion. And a transport ministry spokesman, Karl Byland, said: "It looks like sabotage."

Swiss Transport Minister Roger Bonvin, his voice shaking with emotion, went on the radio Saturday night and said:

"If such a disaster was viciously caused by people who do not respect the lives of others, then anger takes its place alongside sorrow — anger over the viciousness, the wickedness of such people."

In a statement issued in Jerusalem late Saturday night, Israeli Premier Golda Meir said:

"The criminal and murderous blowing up of a Swiss plane enroute to Israel, resulting in the death of tens of persons including about 12

Prison Poet Italian Prizewinner

MESSINA, Sicily (AP) — A convicted robber was moved the length of Italy in handcuffs Saturday to receive first prize in a national poetry contest.

Lucio Caselli, 35, whose prison term began in 1964 and ends in August, 1971, will receive the golden plague of the "amphora of Naxos" poetry contest of Taormina. The award will be made in Messina prison today.

He was transferred here from his cell in a prison at Trento in Northern Italy by train under police guard.

Laotian Forces Disintegrating

Battlefield 'Utter Chaos'

VIENTIANE, Laos (AP) — Swept from the Plain of Jars by an overwhelming North Vietnamese blow, the Laotian government garrison retreated in confusion Saturday with a third of its force dead or missing.

"There is utter confusion and chaos," said a high Laotian army officer. "We do not know where the government units are, whether the wounded are still lying on the plain or whether they have got into the mountains."

The government garrison of 1,500 men based at Xieng Khouang was hit by 6,000 North Vietnamese supported by tanks. By mid-day the northern soldiers controlled nearly all the plain. Officials said more than 500 defenders were killed or missing. North Vietnamese losses were unknown.

Sources in Saigon said United States fighter-bombers from bases in Thailand and Laos' tiny air force flew more than 200 sorties trying to halt the North Vietnamese advance.

In Washington, United States Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield said Saturday recent use of B-52s against targets in Laos "makes it more mandatory than ever" that the Nixon administration permit publication of Senate hearings on U.S. involvement there.

The Montana Democrat said use of the big bombers in an apparently unsuccessful effort to hold a key plain against Communist attacks was an escalation, adding "escalation usually begets escalation."

Military sources in Vientiane reported the North Vietnamese had concentrated 20,000 troops in the area of the plain, 125 miles northeast of Vientiane.

The remainder of the 10,000-man force of Gen. Vang Pao, the Laotian commander, was preparing for a bitter stand to defend his headquarters at Long Cheng, 30 miles southwest of the plain.

Premier Prince Souvanna Phouma pledged earlier this week that government forces would hold the plain, which is 50 miles long and 20 miles wide.

U.S. officials had counselled against trying to hold the plain against the strong North Vietnamese forces. They said the plain's strategic value was doubtful and not worth the casualties.

While the plain is of little value to the Laotian government, it is vital to the North Vietnamese. They need it to guard the Ho Chi Minh Trail through eastern Laos over which they send men and supplies to South Vietnam.

U.S. Armor Ambushed

SAIGON (AP) — A North Vietnamese force hiding in hedgerows ambushed a United States armored unit south of Da Nang, killing more Americans than in any single previous battle this year, military spokesmen said Saturday.

In a five-hour battle, 14 Americans were killed and 29 wounded, the spokesmen reported. Four North Vietnamese bodies were found on the battlefield.

VANCOUVER (CP) — The black ink wasn't just on the 12 pages of the Vancouver Express which made its debut here Saturday.

It was also on the account books of the Vancouver-New Westminster Newspaper Guild which launched the Express aimed at filling a gap left by temporary suspension of publication of the evening Sun and morning Province.

"We'll be making a profit on the first edition," said Jim Young, president of the guild. "They've been going like hotcakes.

"The reception seems to be very, very good indeed. We've had many favorable comments and we're very, very pleased."

The edition hit the streets six days after Pacific Press Ltd. suspended publication of the two newspapers it produces as a dispute between

Higher Pay

Draft End Urged By Probe

Colonist Los Angeles Times Service

WASHINGTON — A special commission recommended to President Nixon Saturday that military pay be promptly raised and the draft eliminated 16 months from now.

Its 11-month study, the commission said, convinced its members that U.S. armed forces can be maintained at levels of up to 3,000,000 men without using draftees.

The group recommended, however, that elimination of the draft on June 30, 1971, be coupled with stand-by authority to use selective service in case of emergency, but only with the approval of Congress.

There was no immediate White House comment on the report. But a return to a volunteer military force would carry out a major campaign pledge by Nixon in 1968.

Israelis, is a deed which must shock everyone."

Mrs. Meir said the Israeli government "will deal with the issue in its meeting tomorrow morning."

The explosion occurred shortly after another blast ripped a hole in an Austrian airliner carrying mail for Israel. The Austrian plane made it safely back to Frankfurt.

In Washington, the U.S. state department said it understood the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, a miner Arab guerrilla organization, had claimed responsibility for the Austrian airliner explosion as well as the Swiss air jet crash.

"Certainly the conscience of the civilized world will be shocked by these claims and outraged should they prove true," the department said in a statement.

Theo Kaesling, head of the federal investigation commission sent to the crash site north of Zurich by the Swiss Aviation Board, told newsmen the pilot reported an explosion at the back of the plane.

"He reported an explosion to the Zurich control tower and added that the smoke was so thick from the fire that broke out that he couldn't see the instruments anymore," Kaesling said.

The Israelis among the crash victims included Hanoch Lev-Cochav, 41, a former director general of the Israeli labor ministry, and Dr. Hanoch Milvitzky, 58, head of the department of chest and heart surgery at Hadassah Hebrew University Hospital.

The popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, a splinter Arab guerrilla organization, said in Beirut its agents had engineered the explosion aboard the Coronado jetliner. A spokesman said the craft was sabotaged "because it had high-ranking Israeli officials aboard."

However, major Arab guerrilla organizations said reports that they were responsible for the crash were "totally untrue." A statement by the newly-formed "unified command" of guerrillas in Amman, Jordan—including the Palestine Liberation Organization led by Yasir Arafat—claimed the reports were meant to cast a slur on the guerrilla movement.

Swiss officials refused to comment on the possibility of sabotage. But they said all luggage had been X-rayed before being loaded onto the plane.

Arab terrorist organizations have been threatening Swiss air with reprisals since the sentencing in December of three Arabs convicted in that attack.

A bomb threat forced cancellation in Rome of an Alitalia Airlines flight to Tel Aviv Saturday, and its passengers eventually left two hours later on another plane.

Losses Double In Forests

SEATTLE (AP) — Vandalism and theft losses in 1969 totalled $120,000 in the national forests of Washington and Oregon, more than double the figures for the previous year, the U.S. Forest Service has announced.

Castor Oil's For the Birds

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — An emergency airlift brought 1,440 bottles of castor oil to St. Petersburg and officials say it's for the birds.

Volunteers cleaning ducks, grebes, cormorants and other water fowl trapped in last week's Tampa Bay oil slick found castor oil was the best substance for washing away the tarry fuel oil that covered the birds' feathers.

GORDE HUNTER

Brotherhood

THE Canadian Council of Christians and Jews twig the conscience with a little reminder every year. It's called Brotherhood Week, this year's effort getting underway tomorrow.

It's the week in which the bigots cleanse their souls apply balm to the conscience by doggedly refusing to use epithets they use the 51 other weeks of the year. Oh, they have their endearing phrases to describe the blacks, the Indians and Italians, but somehow or other the main target is the Jew.

I somehow feel that Victorians have missed one of the truly rewarding ethnic relationships that can be found anywhere. Victoria probably has one of the smallest Jewish communities of any major city in Canada. Victorians just don't know Jewish families.

AS A YOUNGSTER in Winnipeg, I formed some fast friendships with Jewish boys and let me tell you one thing, make a friendship with a Jew and you've got a buddy for life. Winnipeg, of course, has a large Jewish community, a close knit, help-the-other-guy rapport that is almost unique in Canadian life today.

You knock the Jew because he makes more money. Blame yourself for not having his dedication, his zeal for making that money. Call a Jew miserly and you're not even close to the truth. I suggest a Jewish friend will go out of his way to see you get an honest shake. "I can get it for you wholesale," contains a lot more fact than fiction and your Jewish benefactor won't ask for anything in return except friendship.

FACTS and figures I don't have to back up my claim that Jewish boys and girls get into less trouble with the law than boys and girls from most other racial groups, but I know it to be true. Live in a city like Calgary, or Winnipeg, or Edmonton, all with large Jewish communities. Check the court statistics and be amazed at the lack of Jewish names on the police blotters. Check the law society scrolls, the medical and dental profession lists, note an inordinate number of Jewish names. They worked their butts off for those shingles hanging outside their offices. Nobody gave them any special favors.

Israel's monumental struggle for existence has drawn admiration from all parts of the free world, but without the fantastic money flow from international Jewry, Israel would never have come into being. The donations are, for the most part, strictly voluntary.

BUT WALK in the caverns of Toronto's financial district and listen to the vituperation heaped on the Jewish head because of the control he exerts in the money markets of the world. He exerts it because of an inbred desire to work hard, to produce, to succeed. Admirable qualities that, in turn, have turned him into a target for bilious abuse.

The Jew, the most persecuted man in the history of the world. Reviled even by the black race, again, because of his monetary station in life. You would think the blacks would look on the Jews as kindred souls. Some do, but too many ape the sick mind of the gentile bigot and they become as much racist as those they despise.

Jackie Robinson, the marvelous Negro baseballer and most definitely an exception to the aforementioned, once spoke at a brotherhood dinner in Calgary and made his point crystal clear with no chance of misquotation.

"THE JEW is my brother," he said. "The gentile is also my brother. I will judge them all individually and never as a group."

I'm sorry, but the cynicism in me forces me to look at the results of Brotherhood Week much as I look on the results of giving something up for Lent.

Be nice to the minorities, the Jews, Indians, blacks, Ukrainians during Brotherhood Week. Then fall back into the pattern of discrimination the rest of the year.

Pollution of the mind—and you don't legislate it out of existence.

Express

the company and five newspaper unions boiled over.

Mr. Young said he expected a sellout of the 100,000 press run of the Express. There were no labor costs involved in the issue which was published without advertising.

"There's no question that we'll sell all we can print," he said. "There is more of a demand than we can meet. Unfortunately we don't have the press capacity."

Mr. Young said Tuesday's edition of the newspaper, which plans three editions a week, will contain advertising and will have 12 to 24 pages.

Picket-Ringed

The advertising deadline for Tuesday ended Friday.

And Mr. Young added that Thursday's edition has sold out its advertising space and will contain 24 pages. The advertising rate is $5 a column inch.

The Express newsroom is located four blocks from the Pacific Press building which has been ringed by pickets since Sunday when the company announced its production halt because of a union work slowdown.

Staff Unpaid

Reporters, editors and printers of the Express are not being paid. Working on the newspaper is considered a "dispute assignment," comparable to picket duty.

The publishers, who identified themselves as "Pugstem Publications Ltd.", said in a front page notice that the Express was "born out of the temporary suspension of the Vancouver Sun and the Vancouver Province."

"The Express is being published to fill the void created by Pacific Press suspension of operations . . . it will die when the problem at Pacifc Press is resolved . . ."

The front page also carried three Victoria stories from the provincial legislature, four local stories and three pictures. There were national and international stories inside but no wire service copy.

1,100 Out

In addition to general news, the Express also contained an editorial page, two pages of sport news, a women's page, finance section and two pages of entertainment news and television listings.

The Pacific Press shutdown left 1,100 employees out of work after the company said slowdowns cost it $750,000. Pacific Press has cancelled its contracts with the guild and four mechanical unions.

The contracts expired Oct. 31 but had been kept in force by mutual agreement until publication was supended. The two sides reached substantive agreement on wages but other contract issues remained unresolved after talks broke off in November.

'New Outlook'

A Pacific Press spokesman said he hoped the guild's entry into the publishing business would give it "a new outlook on the difficulties management faces in producing a newspaper."

"We presume they have studied carefully all the ramifications of their actions."

Replied Mr. Young: "We are in a very unpleasant situation and we are just trying to make the best of it."

More Than One Cause

By G. C. THOSTESON, MD

Your Good Health

Dear Dr. Thosteson: What medicine is available to alleviate the discomfort and pain of sinus trouble? I have had allergy shots, which did not help, and an antihistamine which caused dizziness and headache.— Mrs. P.F.T.

Possibly you are looking in the wrong direction when you want "medicine" to solve sinus trouble.

Sometimes medication will solve the problem. Sometimes it won't. "Sinus trouble" can stem from infection, polyps or other growths, allergy, physical defects which prevent the sinus cavities from draining correctly.

Of those four possibilities, you have tackled only one — allergy. (The antihistamines are to subdue allergic response.)

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I have a friend with two children. Neither child is required to wash hands after going to the bathroom. She seems to think her children do not have any germs. Am I too fussy? I will try to look the other way when they don't wash their hands if you think I am. Will you write an article regarding this matter?—N.W.

Yes, look the other way when the kids don't wash their hands. They aren't your children.

Of course fingers pick up germs. And if there are any pinworms in the vicinity, fingers pick up pinworm eggs, but you just make yourself miserable by fretting about somebody else's kids.

They should be taught better hygience.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: My daughter is getting married soon, but she wants to wait before starting a family. Do you think birth control pills would be best for her to take? If so, how soon before she gets married should she start?—Mrs. L.G.

The pill has proved itself very successful for the majority of women. If she decides to try it, she should see her doctor a couple of months before the marriage. It usually takes a cycle or so for sure effectiveness to develop.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: To settle an argument betwen my dad and me, can pierced ears be grown back by leaving them vacant for a time?—S.L.

Yes, the hole tends to close up, leaving a tiny dimple.

Viet Coffin Maker No Student of War

By GEORGE MCARTHUR
Colonist Los Angeles Times Service

TAN AN, South Vietnam — It clearly puzzled Nguyen Van Ngo that a foreign newsman would stop at his workshop to ask about his business — which is making coffins — but he politely gestured inside toward three small stools and said come in.

Wearing the white cotton trousers and high necked tunic of a Cao Dai Buddhist, Ngo clasped his hands in the traditional greeting, shook hands in the western manner and finally bowed for good measure.

Pouring lukewarm green tea into small, well-used cups, the 40-year-old coffin maker cautiously conceded that the level of his business might reflect the level of the war.

In fact, he said, he had sold only eight coffins last month. This was the smallest monthly number in two years, certainly because the war was becoming less intense, he said. But he shrugged as though to indicate that such developments were hard to figure out precisely.

Speaking in the soft accents of the Mekong Delta, Ngo warned apologetically that he knew less about the war than one might think. In his business, he said, it was certainly impolite to ask too many questions of his customers. With a war going on it was not only impolite but very risky!

Shifting uneasily and rubbing his graceful but worn hands, Ngo agreed to the assertion that doubtless some of the coffins bought in his roadside shop had been used by members of the communist Viet Cong.

One could not prove that, he implied, and he did not wish to try. Furthermore, he had four carpenters working for him. Sometimes his wife or the eldest of his five children might talk to a customer.

"I am not curious," he said through an interpreter. "Even if I wanted to be, I have learned it is better to be otherwise. I sell to whoever comes to me."

He had the "feeling" that for the past several years more than half, perhaps 70 per cent, of his coffins were used for civilian victims of the war. (Ngo almost never sold to the South Vietnamese army, which has its own facilities.)

Ngo was unsure that this was a portent for the future. Stacked in disordered rows on the dirt floor of his workshop were more than 30 coffins in varying states of completion. This was more than a month's normal output and he had possibly been building up his stock in expectation of new troubles over Tet, the lunar new year.

Tet had passed with hardly a shot being fired, however, and now Ngo and his workmen had plenty of time to talk in the humid shade of the tile roofed warehouse, a wood frame building about 30 feet deep sitting just off the main provincial highway on the outskirts of Tan An.

He and his carpenters, using little more than crude planes and hammers, make five basic types of coffins. All are about seven feet long and the top of each is the heavy log slab favored in Vietnam. The price, or course, depends on the wood, the workmanship and the painting.

"The Catholics almost always want black coffins," Ngo said. "The Buddhists want red or yellow. In some villages everyone insists on red and in other villages everyone insists on yellow. I do not know why but it is so."

With a philosophic shrug, Ngo indicated that coffins destined for outlying districts, and by implication the Viet Cong, were the plain, unpainted kind he normally sold for about $15.

His most expensive models, made of teak or mahogany, sell for up to about $125 but few people ask for these nowadays. Most people in the Delta settle for a simple coffin with a bit of painted silver or gilt woodcarving at the end. (After the interview, the interpreter explained that in Vietnam it is not impolite to bargain over the price of a coffin. A little haggling would have brought Ngo's prices down perhaps 10 per cent.)

The coffin maker noted with a touch of sadness that his prices now were more than double those he charged 10 years ago when, as a simple farmer's son, he came to Tan An from a more rural district about 15 miles away.

The price of everything is up nowadays, Ngo shrugs. He does not make the point, but an ironic part of his price increase is Viet Cong taxation. The lumber comes from Long Khanh province, northeast of Saigon and the loggers operating in remote forests must pay a heavy Viet Cong tax which, added to the government tax and protection money, amost triples the price of lumber bought by Ngo.

Drugs Invade Army

WASHINGTON (AP) — A former U.S. Army medical officer said Saturday drug use among American troops has reached epidemic proportions in Vietnam and is a matter of serious concern to the U.S. command.

Dr. Gordon Livingston told a Conference on War and National Responsibility that estimates of drug experimentation among soldiers in Vietnam run as high as 80 per cent. Many of the experimenters became addicted.

Livingston, who served in an armored regiment in Vietnam, was one of several speakers at the conference, sponsored by 10 members of Congress who oppose the war.

Dr. Robert Jay Lifton, a professor of psychiatry at Yale University, said returning Vietnam veterans carry a special psychological burden from their participation in the war that could erupt in outbreaks of violence, criminal behavior, racial hostility or withdrawal from society.

Livingston said drug use is but one example of the impact of the U.S. presence in Vietnam. Prostitution also is widespread, he said, and venereal disease is the health problem of highest incidence among U.S. troops.

Romping Elk Evasive

Monique Right There But Satellite Deaf

JACKSON, Wyo. (UPI) — Monique the elk is going to get another shot of the same medicine unless she stops playing hide and seek with Nimbus III, a nosey satellite whose job it is to keep tabs on her.

The orbiting satellite for the second straight day Saturday was unable to spot the 500-pound cow elk as she romped in the rugged terrain of northwestern Wyoming.

James Lynch, a spokesman for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, said no one was certain why the satellite wasn't able to pick up information from a 23-pound equipment-packed collar Monique has wrapped around her neck.

"She may have been kneeling down in the herd or may be in the trees on the hills," Lynch explained.

Ground crews at the site said they have been ablt to track Monique with a ground receiver. It is just Nimbus III that has not been successful.

"We know where she is she's right out here in the herd on the National Elk Refuge," said refuge manager Don Redfearn.

Lynch said they would give Monique a few more days to get in touch with Nimbus III. If she doesn't, Lynch said crews would move in, shoot another tranquillizer into her as they did last Thursday and pop on a new bright red collar to replace the one she has been wearing.

Deaf Man Perfects Tiny Hearing Aid

OFFERS FREE MODEL (not an actual hearing aid)

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—A remarkable tiny hearing aid has been perfected by a man who has been hard of hearing for nearly ten years.

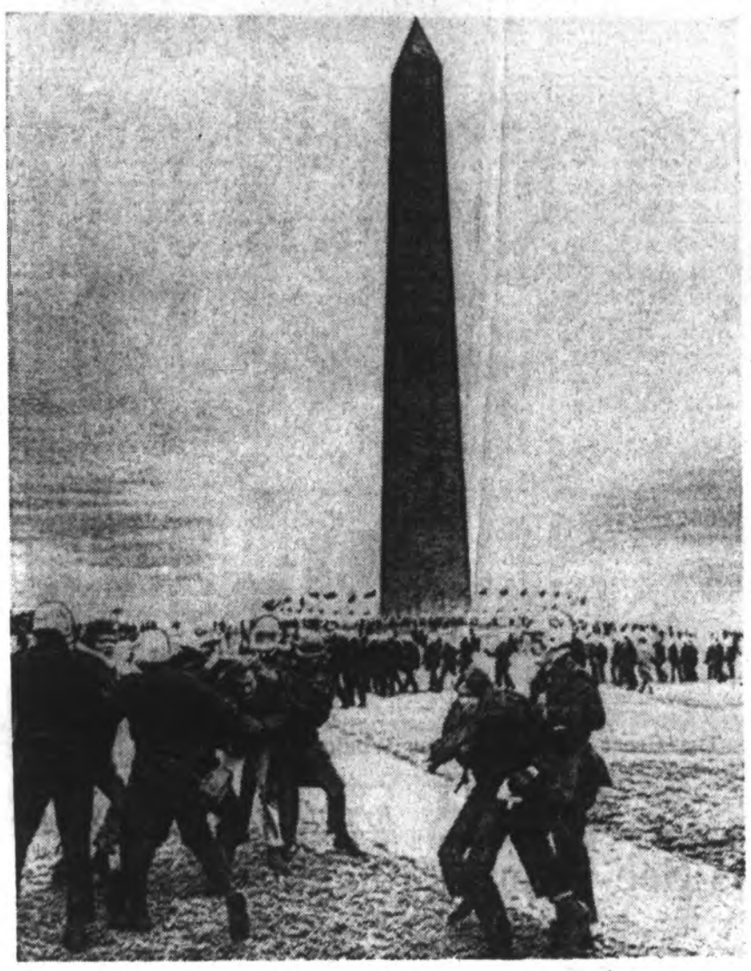

This small device has no dangling cords or separate transmitting units and represents a new, unusual design idea in a product to help hard-of-hearing.

It was developed especially for those persons who can hear but can't understand. This new hearing instrument provides "ear-level" hearing with the wearer picking up speech, sounds, television and radio at his ear. Due to the use of transistors, the user cost is extremely low.

A true life, actual size replica of the smallest all-in-the-ear hearing aid ever made will be given absolutely free to anyone sending in this advertisement, while supply lasts. So we suggest you write for yours now. No obligation whatsoever. Write to Anderson Hearing Electronics, 1320 Blanshard St., Victoria.

Washington police move in Chicago Trial Protest

Riot Police Put Curb On Demonstrators

WASHINGTON (AP)—Hurling obscene slogans and a few rocks, thousands of young demonstrators coursed through Washington streets Saturday protesting the Chicago conspiracy trial.

A heavily reinforced contingent of riot police blocked the marchers from crossing Constitution Avenue toward the White House. More than a dozen persons were arrested as police tried to break up the crowd.

And in Chicago at least eight persons were arrested as thousands massed outside the Cook County Jail, where five men convicted of inciting riots the week of the 1968 Democratic National Convention were being held, along with two others who were acquitted but jailed on contempt charges.

Picking up strength as it moved, the Washington crowd marched from a gathering point across from the Justice Department building, scene of violence during an anti-war protest last Nov. 15.

The parade of shouting, flag-waving demonstrators moved past a local police station, where leaders said they were showing "solidarity with all political prisoners," and on to the Washington Monument area across from the White House grounds.

FLAGS STAY UP

Twice police stopped efforts to haul down American flags, once when a squad of motorcycle and horse-mounted officers diverted a group moving on the 50 U.S. flags at the base of the Washington Monument.

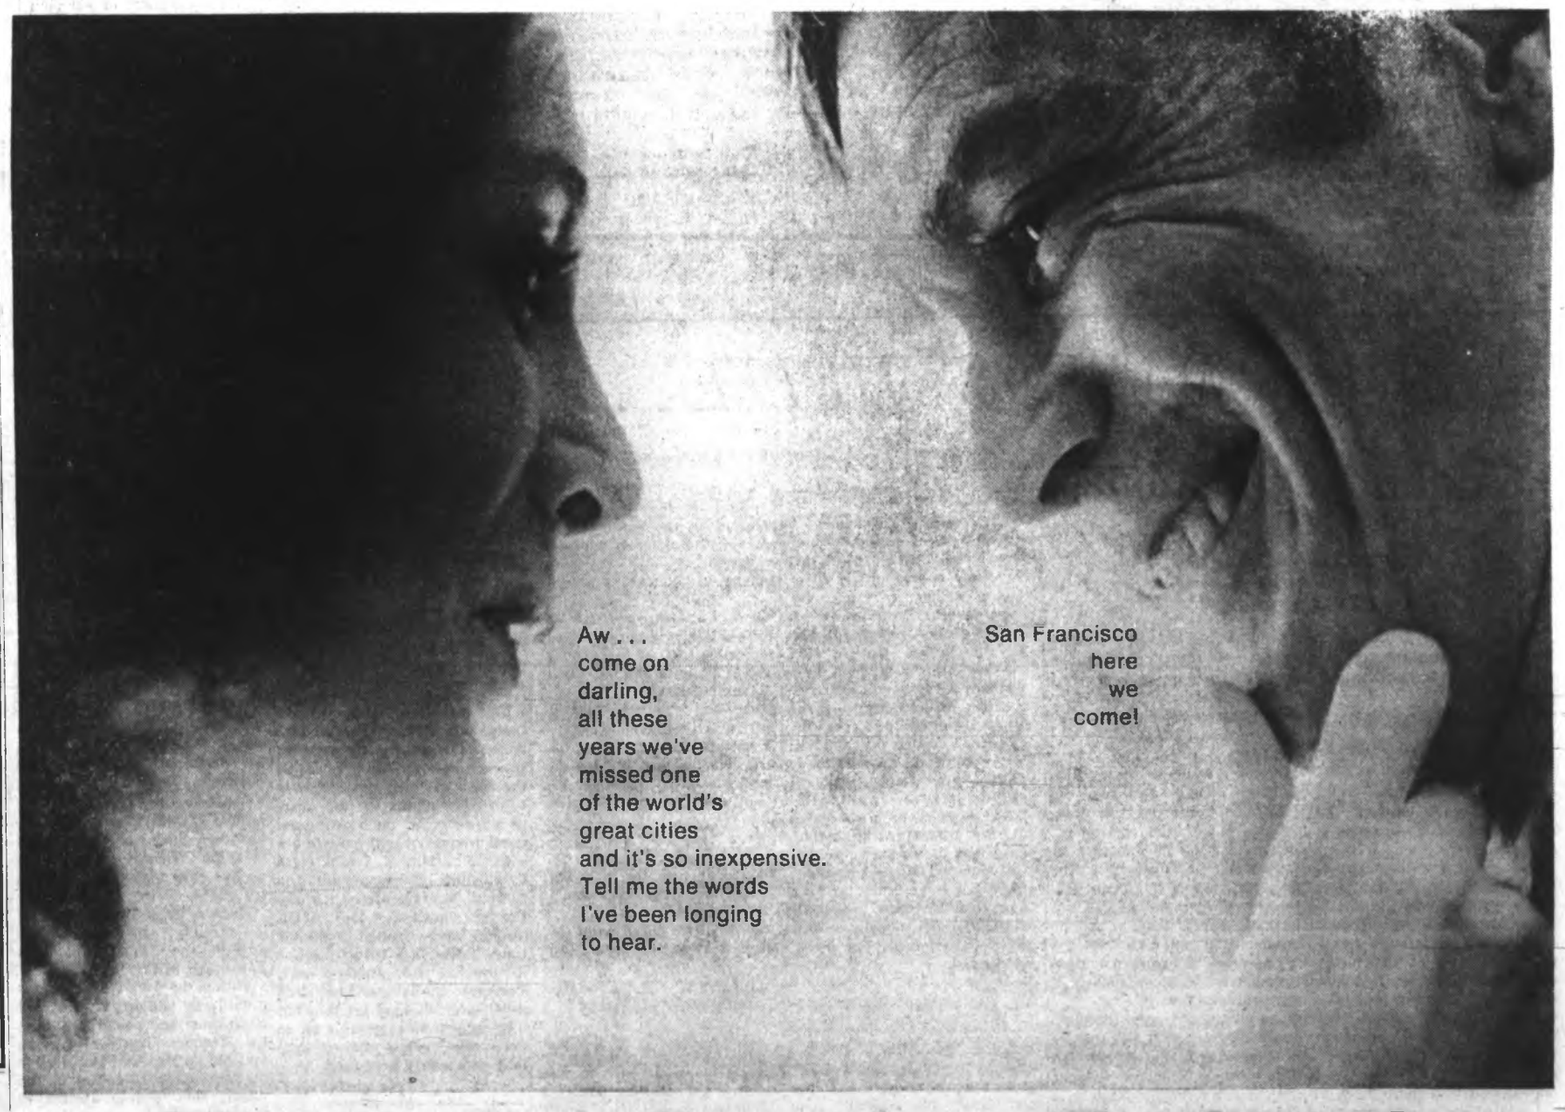

Sporadic rock throwing at public buildings and passing police was sighted along the march route, but no damage or injury was reported.

Are We Getting Full Value?

IN LAUNCHING Canada's somewhat delayed battle against inflation Prime Minister Trudeau has not only assured his countrymen that his government is doing everything possible to hold Ottawa costs down but has recently appealed to the individual Canadian to assist in the fight by making sure that full value is received for every dollar spent.

Oddly enough at about the same time the same sentiments were being expressed in far off London in a large British government display advertisment appearing in The Times. Placed by the Ministry of Defence the advertisement asks in bold type: "Are we getting value for money?" and then answers the question.

It is a question that Canadians might like to ask. Certainly they are in no position to answer it, and it might well be suspected that Ottawa isn't either.

For instance, much has been made of the fact that Ottawa's 1970-71 defence spending is up only slightly over last year for a total of $1,816,000,000, but few, if any, details on how the money will be expended have been realeased.

The London advertisment asks other questions: "Do you have the feeling that in the matter of defence we are paying more and more for less and less? Do you ask yourself if the man who joins the services now is joining a force that counts for anything in the world?"

It then goes on to show by statistics and through detail of armaments that the British taxpayer is indeed getting his money's worth. It points out that defence spending as a percentage of national product is down between six and seven per cent over the past ten years; it notes that despite a severe reduction of manpower all three services have a greater effective defence capability than ever before; and assures the taxpayer that Britain is still able and ready to meet all its commitments anywhere in the world.

It has become very obvious that Canada's defence department could make none of these claims. And Canadian taxpayers may wonder why.

They may find it difficult to understand how the State of Israel can maintain and operate an effective three-service modern defence force on a war footing at a cost of half-a-billion dollars less than Canada spends to run a peace-time force equipped with obsolete weapons. They may find it difficult to understand how Britain can reduce her military spending year after year but still equip her three services with the latest and best equipment and fill in the gap left by Canada in NATO's European force.

Of course the Trudeau government may feel that it is undesireable to maintain an efficient and well armed defence force; it may sincerely believe that the time has come for Canada to break with NATO and other multi-national defence programs and establish itself as a true peace-loving nation possessing neither the capability of offence or defence.

If this is the case, Canadians may be entitled to ask what the $1,816,000,000 is to be spent on — and why. On the face of things it does not appear that we are getting value for our money.

CANADIANS who have been persuaded by such people as UN Secretary-General U Thant and Conservative MP Robert Thompson that all is well in the former rebel state of Biafra may be interested in a recent report on conditions there given by Mr. Michael Ogon, commissioner for rehabilitation for the South-Eastern state of Nigeria, which formerly was part of Biafra.

Mr. Ogon, a Nigerian official, stated Monday in Lagos that the state for which he is responsible is facing "grave danger of starvation." Unless immediate steps were taken, he said, the plight of war-distressed people in the state would be worse than it had been during the civil war.

His commission, he said, was now feeding nearly one million people and that all those who were being returned to the state were penniless and relied on rations given by the commission.

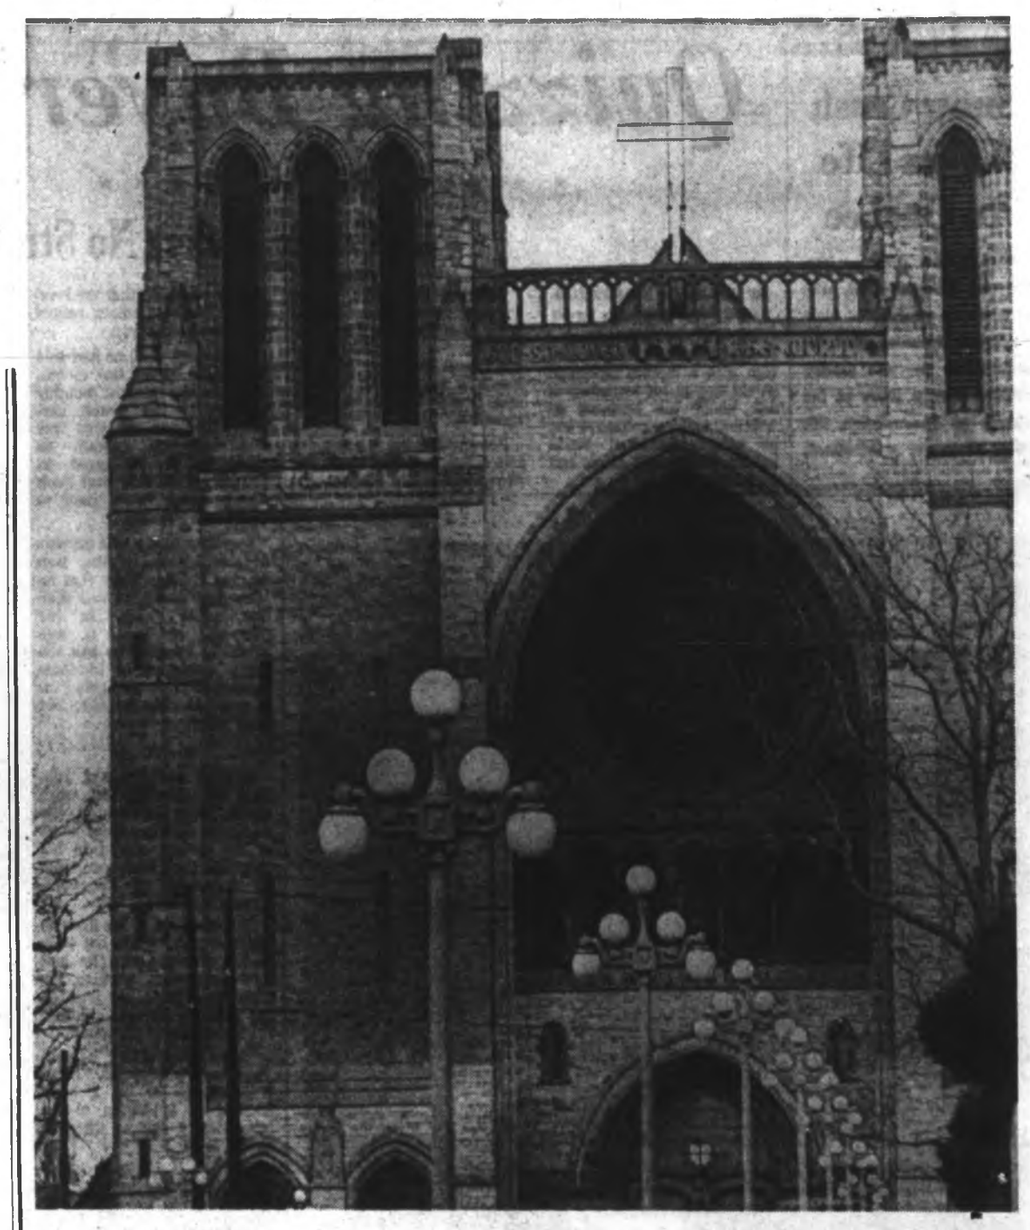

Mr. Ogon said that the government had intended that all affected areas should be fairly treated but recent experiences in the sharing of relief supplies by the government showed that this was not happening. The South-Eastern state had been neglected while other areas had received more than their fair share.

Since the end of the civil war, Mr. Ogon told reporters, the whole of the South-Eastern state had received approximately $200,000 in food relief and administration whereas $375,000 had been given to the Mid-Western state for just two towns.

He added that the South-Eastern state had had relatively small allocations of equipment and vehicles. Six vehicles had been allocated to his state by the Nigerian Red Cross compared with 303 for the East-Central state.

Mr. Ogon's statement hardly substantiates either U Thant's contention that human distress in Biafra is not as serious as it had sometimes been reported or Mr. Thompson's public declaration that reports on starvation in the former breakaway state have been "grossly exaggerated" by the press.

Sadly there is little that the individual can do about the present situation in Nigeria except perhaps to urge the federal government to do everything in its power to find out the truth of conditions today in Nigeria. Until Ottawa does this there is little proof that Canadian aid is accomplishing anything at all.

Honest Operation Must Be Assured

The Calgary Herald

THE federal government's new Information Canada department undoubtedly has certain virtues in its concept, if not in its name. But it also carries potential dangers.

Little exception can be taken to the basic purpose of Information Canada — as defined in the Commons by Prime Minister Trudeau. Greater efficiency and co-ordination of government information services is a worthwhile goal. The present unilateral operations of such agencies as The Queen's Printer, the photo library of the National Film Board, and most significantly, various information offices operated by individual federal departments, unquestionably lead to wasteful duplication of staff and equipment. Placing such services under a single umbrella would, it is hoped, lead to a more economical and efficient operation. The thing of most importance is that the federal government realize that the proper function of the new department will be the dispensing of information— not of government propaganda.

It is a debatable point, therefore, whether Information Canada should also, as the government intends, serve as receptacle for the viewpoints, either favorable or otherwise, of Canadians in general. The present Trudeau administration tends to forget that it does not have a direct pipeline to the public. To assume that it does is to by-pass Parliament which remains the vital safeguard of the public interest.

Conservative leader Stanfield made an important point when he suggested that, if Opposition MPs cannot receive proper information on public matters in the course of the Commons question period, then there will be no chance of Information Canada operating in an honest fashion.

Barrier Broken

The Leader-Post, Regina

THE two-day conference of government officials and industrial and professional leaders in Ottawa produced some encouraging developments for those who believe that inflation can be fought around conference tables instead of by stringent, government-imposed restraints.

However, it remains to be seen what good will come of the encouraging words from Ottawa. They may signal a successful slowing down of the inflation spiral. Or they may turn out to be words only. One thing is sure: the battle of restraint has to be fought by all sectors of a determined population, or else it will have little chance of success.

John Young, chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission, has emphasized voluntary restraints on price increases by business, and on wages by labor. His ideas were at first received with serious scepticism from many sides — particularly from the Canadian Labor Congress, which said it would have no part of any program that would curtail wage demands.

Dr. Young deserves a lot of credit for simply bringing the business leaders together for the conference. A few weeks ago, his chances of such a success seemed very slim.

The Telegram, Toronto

THE federal government has called on the provinces to rewrite their history textbooks so that all early Indians aren't depicted as bloodthirsty savages.

Some of them were, of course, but many were a peace-loving people.

Canadians will agree with Jean Chretien, minister of Indian affairs, that the Indians are entitled to a better break in the school texts. Since education is a provincial responsibility, it is up to the provinces to make the historical changes necessary to satisfy our Indian population.

The Indians feel uncomfortable over the way history treats them. Ottawa agrees they have a justifiable complaint.

Mr. Chretien has pointed out that in most textbooks he has examined, Indians are nearly always the villains in battles with whites. Whenever whites won a skirmish, he added, it is described as an outstanding victory in the interests of peace in the new land.

But whenever the Indians won a battle, he said, it is described as "a massacre."

Actually, English-language texts deal with the situation more fairly than those in French. And Canadian texts aren't as ruthless as those produced in the U.S.

Our native population has made a great contribution to early Canadian history. Their role in it should be accurately portrayed.

Whatever the results of the meeting, the conference at least forced them to take a stand of a sort. That first small step breaks a strong psychological barrier in itself.

In addition, the initiatives taken by the business leaders in agreeing with the principle of price restraints are unusual. No company likes to commit itself in the open to do things which inform the competition of its plans, nor does it like to lower its profit margin by keeping price increases below the rise in its costs. But there has been an agreement-in-principle to do just that, although it is no more than a declaration at the moment. And there were a number of reservations. The men who were at the conference may be unable to get their companies or professions to act. Nor do the guarantees of one man necessarily bind others in his field — and pressures may force firms, particularly those unrepresented at the conference, to increase prices.

Before the meeting took place, Prime Minister Trudeau left no doubts about what the government would do if voluntary restraints could not be arranged.

Labor representatives will presumably be invited to Ottawa to meet with the commission. The CLC is on the spot, in many ways. Voluntary restraints cannot work without labor support, an obvious point made by business leaders before their meeting with the commission. Business says it is prepared to accept restraints even though they mean lower profits. That means the CLC, in turn, should come up with proposals concerning reasonable wage increases which would make the plan feasible. Otherwise the next move may be an even more unwelcome one, taken by Mr. Trudeau.

Tax for Gas Masks

By COLIN LEGUM from Tel Aviv

Few Israelis See Even a Flicker of Hope

ISRAEL'S swinging taxes imposed last week include a personal capitation fee that will provide every Israeli with his own gasmask over the next few years. The portents are clear: Israel is digging in for a long period of neither all-out war or complete peace. This pessimism about the future is total. When one asks how long this state of affairs can be expected to last the answers one gets hardly ever vary. "Who can tell? Five years, 10 years . . . until one day the Arabs decide that peace is better for them as well as for us."

The only area of argument is over whether different Israeli policies could contribute more towards creating opportunitites for a settlement and whether the big powers should be encouraged or discouraged from pursuing their own initiatives.

For the rest, the overwhelming majority undoubtedly backs the official line which, so far from softening since the Six-Day War of 1967, has now hardened into a doctrine of almost national faith. The bed rock of this doctrine is that Arab acquiescence to talks with Israelis (indirectly at first, but directly at the end) is the only possible way of reaching a settlement.

The argument is that if Arabs refuse to talk to Israelis no agreement vicariously reached through brokers can give Israel the sense of security it needs in return for giving up the occupied territories. Such an agreement would not only postpone a settlement but, if Israel were meanwhile to surrender its present strategically advantageous position, the Arabs would have gained valuable time and be in a better position to prepare for another war. Therefore the Israelis insist that it is safer to hold on to what they have than to gamble on an even less certain future than that which they now face.

Irritation over the big powers' intervention has induced a scabrous condition on Israel's body politic. There are two reasons for this. The most important is that they think that the Big Four's efforts in acting as brokers only reduce the pressures on the Arabs to face up to their own responsibility in negotiating a proper settlement acceptable to themselves and to Israel; and that intervention is actually impeding this process of the kind of settlement which might one day be forced on them if the Big Four should actually agree among themselves on its broad terms.

"What kind of a settlement can we expect from the Big Four," one is frequently asked, "when two and a half of the powers are hostile to us—the Russians, the French and the ambiguous British?" And they are no longer 100 per cent sure of the Americans after what they call "the stab in the back" by U.S. Secretary of State William Rogers. The Rogers proposals have badly shaken not only the more hawkish elements in Mrs. Golda Meir's coalition but the cabinet as a whole.

Their criticism of his plan is that in advance of negotiations he has tied Israel's hands on a number of vital details over the possible shape of the new frontiers, the future of Jerusalem, and the nettling problem of taking back an unspecified number of Palestine refugees. Equally upsetting is Rogers' failure to emphasize the sine qua non of demilitarization of the evacuated conquered territories.

The Israelis shudder to think what their position might have been—especially their relations with the Americans—if the Arabs had been shrewd enough to say "Agreed" to Rogers. The cabinet view is that so far from facilitating negotiations the Rogers proposals have set them back perhaps several years. Their argument is that the Arabs would be justified in thinking that if their tactics have succeeded in moving the Americans so far along the line of compromise they might hope for even more by maintaining their hostilities a few years.

These dominant Israeli attitudes can be explained only by accepting that their fears about the "unreliability of the gentile world" are not irrational. They claim centuries of Jewish experience at the hands of gentiles to justify their own certainty that, ultimately, the big powers are bound to put their own national interests above Israel's own assessment of what constitutes the minimum safeguards for her own security. In the words of one senior minister: "If the gentiles make a mistake in deciding what might be sufficient guarantee for Israel's survival they could just be making another mistake in their long record of mistakes—but for us it would be catastrophic."

Credible or not, this represents the views of most Jews in "an Israel that dwells alone." Hence the almost religious belief in the power of the Jewish right arm to defend its own heart. This belief in Jewish military power to end Jewish dependence on unreliable gentile allies has become an established article of faith in Israeli policy-making. Without understanding this psychological element in Israeli thinking it is hardly possible to make sense of their policies.

And here one comes face to face with an apparent glaring contradiction. On the one hand Jewish confidence in its military strength is unquestionably higher today than at any time since the founding of the Jewish state 22 years ago. Yet the country is today more deeply troubled and unhappy than at any time since the ominous days before the outbreak of the war in June, 1967. How to explain this seeming paradox? "What we are fighting for is not to prove that we can lick the Arabs but to demonstrate that we cannot be crushed by them," a leading hawk said. "This country needs peace above territory and there is almost nothing we are not prepared to give up to achieve it."

Is this true? What of General Moshe Dayan's frequent statements that Israel will never give up the Golan Heights or Jerusalem or Gaza, or his demands for almost one-third of Sinai in order to assure the defence of the Straits of Tiran? How does this square with Israeli willingness to come to any acceptable settlement with the Arabs?

The answer to these questions put to a number of leading hawks can be summed up in these words:

"So long as there is no sign of willingness by the Arabs to talk to us we will be as obdurate as hell. There is absolutely nothing we will be ready to give up, and there are almost no limits to which we will not go in order to hold on to what we took after the Six-Day War. That is one side of the picture—the only side we have seen since the war.

"But there is another side. If we were given the slightest convincing evidence of Arab willingness to discuss with us how to implement the Security Council decision of November 1967 the mood of the country would switch completely overnight.

"There is almost nothing the Jewish people would not be ready to give up for the chance of real peace. There is no reason why the Arabs should believe us, but let them test us in talks and then they would discover the truth, that Israel is more interested in peace than in territory."

The Fish Are Back

Pollution Mastered In London's Thames?

AFTER nearly 50 years, fish are swimming again in one of the world's most notorious open sewers, the River Thames.

London's delighted city fathers say this proves they are winning their battle against pollution. The river water is cleaner now than it has been in 200 years.

Even a baby was baptized in it recently, the first time anyone ever heard of that happening in the Thames.

Within the last year fishermen have caught 42 kinds of freshwater and ocean fish from the Thames between London and the rivermouth. But despite the gradual purification of the water, this 40-mile stretch of the river may never again become "fishful" as the 18th century knew it.

The Thames was once a famous salmon river, with a fishing fleet supporting a flourishing London fish market, the National Geographic Society says.

The last salmon was caught in the river in 1824. Soon cartloads of dead fish were being hauled away from London's riverbanks.

The speaker of the House of Commons in 1854 proclaimed that salmon were "wiser than most members of Parliament because they avoid the river's pollution and no longer brave swimming up the Thames to spawn."

The lawmakers, however, remained in their, riverside Russians, the French and the ambiguous British?" And they are no longer 100 per cent sure of the Americans after what they call "the stab in the back" by U.S. Secretary of State William Rogers. The Rogers proposals have badly shaken not Houses of Parliament and tried to curtain themselves from the stench rising off the river by draping the windows with sheets soaked in disinfectant.

But sometimes they had to adjourn for the day.

As a hopeful sign of cleaner water, a 15-inch carp was caught opposite Parliament recently. But in 1675 the Thames was so turgid that silt-blinded haddock could be caught by hand as they threshed backwaters.

Dumping anything into the Thames has been outlawed—and ignored—since 1372.

The houses lining London Bridge escpaed the pile-up of refuse that lured plague rats, thanks to the convenience of the Thames flowing below. Only two bridge residents died of the Black Plague.

Elizabethan dandies complained their clean clothes smelled of the river—where they had just been washed.

In 1702 a London brewer commented: "Thames water, when it is free from all brackishness of the sea and has in it all the Fat and Sullage of this Great City of London, makes very Strong Drink. It will of itself ferment wonderfully . . ."

London's drinking water has always come from the river, but now it comes from 15 miles upstream where the "silver streaming Thames" is still clear and pure.

London's cesspools were closed in 1847, and from then on the sewage emptied into the river. Later sewage systems, constantly expanded, gradually freed the river from this unsavory traffic.

With today's river more pure and livable have come fish—and unwanted eels, barnacles and timber borers.

But nobody has yet collected the $294 prize waiting for the first salmon taken from the "Fair and goodly Thames" where it glides through London.

Abortions: B.C. Misses Spirit of the Law

IAN STREET

Although therapeutic abortions come under federal law the issue has bubbled and boiled in our own provincial Legislature for much of the current session.

From the speeches by members on both sides of the House it is apparent that the spirit of the law change approved by Ottawa six months ago isn't being observed uniformly in this province.

Health Minister Ralph Loffmark, speaking in the Legislature last Thursday, played footsy with the issue but did say the new law concerning therapeutic abortions should be administered with "sympathy, compassion and understanding."

He did take a positive step, however, in announcing that hospitals throughout B.C. must set up the necessary machinery to handle cases in which an expectant mother, because of a threat to her life or physical or mental well-being, has her pregnancy terminated.

Under the old law abortions were only permitted when the life of the mother was judged to be endangered. Nevertheless, the change which took place last August can hardly be termed a liberalization of Canada's abortion law. It is really a change in attitude.

And it poses a new responsibility for the doctors. In addition to making a decision on the medical aspects of the case they must now be judge and jury, as well. There seems to be no doubt the new abortion law places controls in the hands of medical and hospital authorities.

So it's no wonder really that some doctors and hospital authorities are dragging their feet and, incidentally, frustrating the rights of women established by the nation's new abortion law.

There is ample room for non-cooperation. The law says a therapeutic abortion can only be performed with the approval of a hospital committee and that committee must be appointed in the first instance by the hospital's board of governors. There must, of course, also be a doctor willing to perform such an operation and he must be a doctor with privileges at a hospital which permits therapeutic abortions.

Mr. Loffmark made it clear in his speech that institutions run by churches and religious orders wouldn't be forced to provide therapeutic abortions. But he went on to say other hospitals would have to provide the service where the demand merited it.

It's this question of so-called "abortions on demand" that appears to bother many doctors. There obviously must be sound medical reasons before such an operation takes place. But it is apparent also that a need exists.

Even with the present clumsy system of approval by committee in a limited number of hospitals, the minister produced figures which showed 193 therapeutic abortions at five Lower Mainland hospitals in a six-month period prior to Jan. 1, 1970.

The immediate question that comes to mind is: how many applications were made to the therapeutic abortions committees in these five hospitals? Only when this figure is disclosed will there be a real indication of the demand for abortions.

I have no doubt that, under existing circumstances, many doctors in B.C. are unwilling to perform abortions. They often regard the new law, forcing as it does doctors and hospital authorities to decide whether an expectant mother's health or well being is threatened, as a wide open door for abortions. But looming over everything is the threat that too liberal an interpretation could bring a conviction under the Criminal Code, loss of professional status and their livelihood.

There remains, however, the question of how women seeking information on abortions can get it. Liberal MLA Barrie Clark, a radio hotliner, charged in the legislature recently that the Canadian Medical Association has prohibited its members from giving information about abortions.

Mr. Loffmark, who is a lawyer, certainly won't speed up the flow of information from nervous doctors by making veiled threats, as he did in the House last Thursday, that anyone who counsels an act that is illegal in Canada — even if, in this case, the abortion is performed outside the country — is liable to prosecution.

What is needed in B.C., apart from hospitals throughout the province providing this service, is a clear indication from Attorney General Peterson that qualified physicians performing abortions on what the profession considers sufficient grounds, won't be prosecuted.

By ROBERT L. JACKSON
From Washington

Government agencies and the oil industry were almost wholly unprepared for last year's massive oil spill at Santa Barbara, Calif., and encountered one failure after another in attempting to clean it up, according to a report which the interior department kept secret for months.

The 103-page document, entitled Review of Santa Barbara Channel Oil Pollution Incident, was produced by a west coast research organization with a $22,900 dollar federal grant.

The report by the Pacific Northwest Laboratories of Batelle Memorial Institute, Richland, Wash., says that among the lessons learned from Santa Barbara are these:

● Technology for controlling large oil spills is so underdeveloped that ordinary straw, which absorbs four to five times its weight in oil, still is the most effective cleanup device.

● New chemical dispersants should be developed, as well as more workable oil-skimming vessels and better floating booms to protect shorelines and harbors.

● More contingency planning needs to be done by federal and state agencies, together with the industry, to get needed materials and equipment rapidly to the scene.

● More birds are killed than mammals and other sea life in such incidents, although long-term effects on smaller life forms cannot be soon detected. Bird losses totalled 3,600 through the first two months of the Santa Barbara spill, the report said.

The study was described as the first documentary account of what happened at Santa Barbara beginning Jan. 28, 1969, when a blowout occurred in the fifth well drilled by Union Oil Co five miles from shore.

The report did not attempt to pinpoint blame. But from interviews with company and government officials, and a study of private and public documents, the Batelle organization tried to detail the scope of the mishap and provide a look ahead.

So enormous was the spill that it overpowered 37,500 gallons of chemical dispersants in a 10-day period and 140 tons of absorbent straw spread daily offshore, the report said.

After 1,000 men and 125 pieces of equipment had finished working on the beaches — at a cost of $5,000 per mile — it took 5,200 truckloads to carry the oil-soaked straw and other debris to three landfill sites east and west of Santa Barbara. The burning of additional material was halted because of the stench and smoke, the study said.

The inability of government and company officials to find oil-skimming equipment was one frustration, the report said.

"In the first few days following the incident, attempts were made through the United States to locate oil skimmer systems," it said.

"Those located were determined to be either incapable of open sea skimming or unable to be air transported to the scene. As a result, no existing open sea skimmers were brought to the scene, and efforts were directed toward designing systems to be adapted for use with available vessels."

When skimming did begin, the apparatus often became clogged with floating straw or other debris, or drag forces caused the skimmers to submerge or lose their positions and thus miss large quantities of oil, the report said.

Heavy seas, towing difficulties, inexperience and the wide expanse of the oil spill also kept floating booms from being used effectively, the report said.

When the booms failed in Santa Barbara harbor, an estimated 700 of 750 boats there were stained with oil.

Discussing the failure of chemicals to dissolve the oil, the report said:

"The majority of the dispersant applied to the slicks to prevent the oil from reaching the beaches was Correxit 7664, and the application area was normally in excess of one mile offshore.

"The 337 drums (20,000 gallons) applied should have dispersed a minimum of 200,000 gallons of oil, based on the manufacturer's literature from previous trials. General observations were that the majority of the oil that was located offshore . . . eventually reached the beaches."

Nasser Banks on Oil Finds To Save Egypt's Economy

By LISETTE BALOUNY, from Cairo

President Nasser's hopes for the economy of the United Arab Republic lean heavily on the riches that lie beneath the sands of the Egyptian deserts.

"Oil must become the principal source of our income," Nasser has declared. He hopes, through oil, to make up for an annual loss of $197,000,000 incurred since the blockage of the Suez canal and the loss of the country's main oil fields as a result of the June, 1967, Arab-Israeli war.

In the Eastern and Western deserts on either side of the Nile Valley, technicians work nonstop on Egypt's oil potential. Their goal is an annual production of 25,000,000 tons this year.

That would not seem like much as Middle East oil production goes. Little Kuwait and the kingdom of Saudi Arabia each produce about six times that much every year. But to Nasser's government, Egyptian oil is of great importance.

At present six teams — three American, one French, one Italian and one Russian — have established joint oil concerns with the Egyptian government.

In the Eastern Desert, squeezed between the Nile and the Red Sea, is the Morgan field, the largest in the country. It is operated jointly by the Egyptian General Petroleum Corp. and Amoco-UAR Oil Co., an offshoot of American oil companies. Today, the Morgan wells yield almost 300,000 barrels daily against 220,000 last year.

Ten new wells recently have been struck in the Morgan field, bringing the total number of producing wells in the UAR to 37.

Om el Yosr, the largest oilfield discovered by the EGPC in 1968, south of Ras Gharib, now is under development and promises "large rewards," says Aly Waly, chairman of the corporation's board.

In Fayoum, a fertile patch in Egypt's Western Desert, a group of Russians have discovered what they term "a potential oil depot."

Russians also have poked another oil spot in the vicinity, at Siwa Oasis. The giant Soviet rig started drilling at 1,500 feet last July as part of an industrial agreement between the Soviet Union and the UAR. Russia also will supply equipment for six other rigs to be operated jointly with Egyptians.

American Standard of Indiana, in cooperation with the EGPC, is exploring in Asyut, Egypt's Western Desert. The American partner is investing $20,000,000 and will provide equipment for the rigs.

The international success of the Al Alamein oil of Egypt's Western Desert has set geologists and seismographic crews on the scent of other oil discoveries, Al Alamein, operated by American Phillips Petroleum Co., raises 45,000 barrels daily against 17,000 last year. It is considered a natural extension of the Libyan oilfields, some of the richest in the Middle East.

Oil companies are fast gambling that Egypt's Western Desert oil may prove as low in sulphur as Libya's.

Three new fields are scheduled to start producing within the coming months. Egyptian General Petroleum Corp. has alocated $92,000,000 in its budget for the coming year to equip and develop these fields, Aly Waly says.

The three fields, Om Baraka in the Western Desert, About Madi in the northern delta and About Keir offshore in Alexandrian will quickly cover their costs, he predicts.

Move for Independence Receives Wide Support

CALGARY (CP) — A spokesman for a group of business and professional people who have launched a study into the feasibility of an independent Western Canada said Friday he has been inundated with letters supporting the group.

"I find it rather amazing because my group has only talked about the feasibility of separation," A. M. Harradence, a Calgary lawyer and former leader of the Progressive Conservative party in Alberta, told more than 300 persons attending the monthly meeting of the Calgary Real Estate Board.

Harradence announced formation of the group Feb. 10 and said it was gathering a team of consultants who will study the economic, financial and political aspects of an independent Western Canada.

Friday, he said western feelings to the approach of Eastern Canada and the federal government to the west have degenerated from a smouldering to a burning discontent.

Statements from Ottawa about oil policy were callous, cold and deliberately deceiving, "or else they are ignorant of the facts."

"Mr. J. J. Greene, federal minister of energy, mines and resources, has said an oil pipeline will be built into the Montreal market when western oil prices become competitive, but there is no way western oil can compete with the off-shore oil of Venezuela."

Harradence described Prime Minister Trudeau's attitude toward wheat growers as appalling.

"It reflects a man who is totally ignorant or wilfully blind to the plight of the farmer. Even Ontario knows the value of wheat sales to the economic health of the nation."

Although Harradence had said earlier that his group did not want to raise the spectre of a Quebec-like movement and resented the terms separatism or secessionist, he said Friday that "it would not only be feasible but more practical for us to break away."

He said Ottawa treats the west as "patsies" in international trade agreements and warned that westerners have taken their begging cups to Ottawa for the last time.

"If there is no other way to ensure keeping the heritage of the west alive for our children, then I will support a separatist movement."

Yukon Bans Pep Pills

Hovercraft to Deliver Canadian Mail in U.S.

By FAITH ANGUS

The arrival of a light hovercraft carrying the first international hovercraft mail ever carried in the Americas, is one of the novel attractions planned for INTERPEX, the International Philatelic Exhibition opening in New York on March 13.

Leaving Ottawa on March 9, the craft, named INTERPEX, will follow the Ottawa River to Montreal, then the St. Lawrence and Richelieu Rivers to Lake Champlain, into Lake George and the Hudson River to New York City — a distance of some 500 miles.

Special covers and three-fold cards have been designed to commemorate the trip and will be cancelled in Canada and the United States. The hovercraft will remain on display at the Americana Hotel for the duration of the exhibition.

Canada's four 25-cent EXPO 70 stamps produced by six color lithographic printing will salute Asia's first World Exposition on March 18.

Their designs, created by E. R. C. Bethune of Vancouver, B.C. commemorate the four pavilions erected at Osaka by the federal government and provinces of Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia.

Three of the designs associate floral emblems of the participating provinces with the symbol of EXPO 70, a stylized cherry blossom with five petals symbolizing the five continents; its centre a circle representing the rising sun of Japan. The fourth stamp associates the EXPO 70 symbol with that of our centennial EXPO 67.

The four different designs are printed on each single pane of 50 stamps. The federal stamp will bear the legend "Je me souviens — I remember." For the theme of her world fair Japan chose "Progress and Harmony for Mankind."

The new pictorial definitive series which New Zealand will issue during 1970 is divided into seven design groups: Butterflies, ½c, Glade Copper butterfly; 1c, Red Admiral; 2c, Tussock butterfly: designer, Miss Enid Hunter.

New Zealand Moths: 2½c, Magpie Moth (Tupeke); 3c, Lichen Moth (Tawhana); 4c, Pururi Moth (Pepetuna) designed by Miss Eileen Mayo.

New Zealand Fish—5c, Scarlet Parrot Fish (Pawai-Whakarua); 6c, Sea Horse (Manaia); 7c, Leather Jacket (Kokiri); 7½c. Garfish; 8c, John Dory. Designs of the 5, 6, and 7c denominations are by Eileen Mayo and the 7½ and 8c. by D. B. Stevenson.

Royal stamp — 10c. silhouette of Queen Elizabeth II and New Zealand coast of arms; designer, M. Cleverley. Maori Culture — 15c. Maroi Fish Hook; designer, Clevereley; 18c. Maroi Club; 20c. Maori Tatto Pattern; both designed by Miss E. Hunter. National Parks — 25c. Hauraki Gulf Maritime Park by M. Cleverley, 28c. Egmont National Park; designer, M. V. Askey.

Development and Technology — $1 Geothermal Power; $2 Agricultural Technology, also designed by M. Cleverley.

With the exception of Eileen Mayo who designed the 1959-62 zoological series, the other artists are newcomers with no previous experience as postage stamp designers. Their talent was discovered when they participated in the 1968 contest conducted by the New Zealand post office.

Tail Streaks Ahead of Comet

Picture of Tago-Sato-Kosaka comet, named for three Japanese discoverers,, was made by Dr. Guido Munch, astronomy professor at Pasadena's California Institute of Technology, with 47-inch telescope at Palomar Observatory. At the time comet was 35,000,000 miles from earth and 90,000,000 miles from sun. It's moving from left to right, preceded by gas and dust filaments of the tail being blown ahead of comet by solar winds. Portion of tail shown measures about 3,000,000 miles.—(AP)

Against U.S. 'Aggressiveness'

Russia Adds More Missiles

MOSCOW (UPI) — Defence Minister Andrei Grechko said Saturday the Soviet Union is increasing its nuclear missile and other defence capabilities to counter growing "aggressiveness" of the United States.

Grechko made the assertation in a signed article in the theoretical journal, Communist, commemorating Soviet Armed Forces Day. Publication of the journal Saturday followed by one day the claim by U.S. Defence Secretary Melvin Laird in Washington that the pace of the current Soviet missile buildup could leave the United States in a second-place strategic position by the middle of the decade.

Grechko also accused West Germany, Israel and Greece of contributing to world tensions, but he cited the United States as the principal threat to Russia and the Soviet system.

"The aggressiveness of the United States, the biggest imperialist power, has increased," he wrote. To counter the threat, he continued, the Soviet Union is "taking every step for the defensive capacity of our country and the combat preparedness of our army and navy to match the tasks confronting them.

"Strategic rocket troops are today the basis of the defensive might of the Soviet Union," Grechko wrote. But in addition to the development of nuclear rockets and missiles, he continued, emphasis also is being placed on "development of the most up-to-date weapons—nuclear weapons, missiles of different ranges and purposes, highly manoeuverable planes, new tanks and atomic missile submarines."

Kindness Works Better Than Jail

GALLUP, N.M. (UPI) — Instead of throwing intoxicated Indians wholesale into an overcrowded jail, Gallup gave them breakfast and a warm place to sleep off their hangovers Saturday. The result was almost revolutionary.

Instead of the former 200 that used to be packed in the jail, only eight were arrested during the night.

The city's crisis began Feb. 13 when a federal court ordered the detention centre to hold no more than 60 men.

More than 180 prisoners were turned loose, and dozens later lay in the streets.

Learning from that weekend, volunteer groups and city officials worked together to provide shelter and food for the drunks Friday and Saturday night.

"It has shown that these people don't have to be arrested," said a volunteer attorney. "It makes the whole penal system seem very inappropriate for the drinking problem."

Our Principals

Significance His Aim

If Jack Lowther can make school more meaningful to the bulk of students under his control, he'll achieve one of his major aims in life.

Mr. Lowther is principal of Mt. Douglas senior high school — the school in which he began a teaching career that had its origin when he was a student himself.

He was born in Nanaimo and educated first there in schools which, he notes a bit sadly, are now no more; Middle Ward elementary, Thomas Hodgson for Grades 5, 6 and 7; John Shaw through Grade 12.

It was mainly the teachers he had in Grade 10 who decided him on his profession — people he regarded with such respect and affection that they were, in a sense, ideals.

Next came University of British Columbia for four years to gain his BA, followed by a year's teacher-training.

Keenly interested in sports, he specialized in distance running, setting a record for the mile at Nanaimo and winning his letter for cross-country at UBC — so it was natural that he should include physical education among his teaching subjects.

When he first came to Mt. Douglas in 1954 he taught PE and biology (among other subjects) to the student body which then numbered 157. There are now 700.

Lowther

Mr. Lowther remained on the Mt. Douglas staff for 13 years, then was named vice-principal at Mount View senior high. He feels a deep gratitude to his principal there, Robert Huddleston, for the help, guidance and shared experiences of those two years. His appointment to Mt. Douglas came last September.

Through the summers of his teaching years, Mr. Lowther returned to UBC to attain his bachelor's and master's degrees in education.

His hobbies include gardening (he used to show dahlias and chrysanthemums), fishing and swimming. He and his wife, former Nanaimo teacher Betty Lou Geernaert, have four children: Cheryl, 15, at Oak Bay senior; Susan, 14, at Oak Bay junior; Brett and Kathy, 11 and 9, at Monterey.

Most rewarding phase of his work he thinks is being in a position to do something "for the very fine young people we have in our schools."

Mr. Lowther has devised his own "rule of life":

"When you commit an unkindness against another person you commit a greater unkindness against yourself; you become less than you are capable of being." — E.M.S.

Bogus Builder Sentenced To 42 Years

VENTURA, Calif. (UPI) — A superior court judge has sentenced the operator of a bogus shipbuilding company to 42 years in prison after telling the defendant the parade of witnesses who testified to losing their life savings had almost made him cry.

Judge Howard Crandall Friday sentenced John van Geldern on 41 separate counts — three of grand theft and taking investment funds, five of theft by false pretences and 33 corporate code violations — in his operation of the Hydro Ship Building Co.

The judge also recommended that Ventura County grant no money for Van Gelder's expected appeal until an investigation establishes that he does not have access to any of the $500,000 he bilked from investors.

Among those testifying to investing in the company, which leased space at the Ventura marina but never built a ship, were a landscape gardener, a small motel owner and a Dutch immigrant.

Crandall said he almost cried when the immigrant told of investing the family's last $2,500, which had been intended to finance part of her child's college education.

Slump Sparks 'Well-Heeled' Pitch

By HARRY YOUNG
Business Editor

The investing public has been amused in the past few weeks not by the performance of the stock market but by the new look in advertising adopted by some of the leading investment houses.

One company has pictorially created the impression that its clientele is the Rolls-Royce set with liveried chauffeurs and all the trimmings. This is pure Madison Avenue, aimed at suggesting the Rolls-Royce was the result of doing business with the firm, rather than that the firm was interested only in the upper-crust.

One uses Nicholas II (Czar of all the Russias) as a come-hither gimmick to internationally-minded investors.

KEEP THE FAITH

Another has put out a series of dialogues between two obviously well-heeled young executives who have great faith in the acumen of the investment firm with which they claim to deal.

Of course other investment firms carry on in the old way. They staidly announce new issues in which they are selling-agents, or proclaim some of the services they offer. And further advances they would deem to be undignified.

BUSINESS BAD

As business for the past few months in the stock and bond market has been frankly bad — bitten by the inflation battle bug—investment and brokerage firms have not been doing well. Volume of business has dried up so far as trading is concerned, and new creamy issues have been few and mainly hard to market.

In comparison with the boom of a year ago, when firms were employing new salesmen right and left, the situation is not good.

Many firms have their men on a straight commission basis, others say "produce or else."

In these circumstances, the turn to new advertising gimmicks is a natural.

TOO EARLY

The representative of one of the "go-go" firms said the new advertising approach had certainly "created a lot of talk," but it was too early to assess results.

Another said it was perhaps the advent of big U.S. firms into the Canadian investment business that had provoked the new trend as a defensive move.

One salesman whose firm has not so far indulged in the prestige type advertising said, "I wouldn't mind if you told your readers that Rolls-Royces are fine but I am happy to deal with the Volkswagen society."

HYDRO NEEDS

B.C. Hydro will require new power generation sources by 1973 to handle the expected demand, says Progress, the B.C. Hydro quarterly publication.

It lists the following as alternative methods by which the power can be obtained.

- Another dam and more generators on the Peace River at Site One, a few miles downstream of the Bennett Dam.
- Addition of another unit at Burrard Thermal plant.
- Construction of a thermal plant on Vancouver Island.
- Installation of generators at Mica Dam now being built.
- Construction of a Kootenay Canal plant to take advantage of the new Libby Dam reservoir.
- Construction of a thermal plant in the East Kootenays.

Additional facilities at Whashan and Jordan River will bring B.C. Hydro's capacity to 4,366,000 kilowatts by 1972, but this will not provide the 10 to 15 per cent safety reserve of generating capacity needed for the anticipated load demand of 3,965,000 kilowatts in 1973.

WRONG YARDSTICK

An easterner who has been trying to tell us what makes Victoria tick, made the whimsical, we hope, suggestion that the University of Victoria might be turned into an old persons' dormitory.

The criticism he made against the university was that only a small percentage of those who graduated could become established in the city because of the scarcity of jobs.

If this is the criterion, a lot of the world's most famous educational institutes should be out as well.

Oxford, Harvard, Cambridge, Yale, St. Andrews and Cornell are examples of top-ranking universities whose home cities are just as job-scarce as is Victoria.

It's not the size of a place that makes the good home for a university. It's the indefinable atmosphere and the quality of the education that counts.

YOUTH ELIXIR

"The American public is completely drugged by youth. Youth is on the hot line — setting a pulsating pace for the nation. The word is out; drink young, think young. Young hair, young wear, young faces, young places."

This is the introduction to the current issue of Youthmark, the publication issued by National Student Marketing Corporation to tell business, advertising and marketing communities where their big new market is.

DIGESTION BETTER

The Canadian Readers Digest company which temporarily lost its profitmaking ability when Canadian postal rates were increased in 1968, is back on an earning level.

The company reports net earnings of $288,000 (31 cents a share) in the six months ended Dec. 31. A year earlier it had lost $97,000 in a similar period.

Prices Group To Meet With Labor

OTTAWA (CP) — Labor will hold an informal meeting with the prices and incomes commission in a few days, William Dodge, secretary-treasurer of the Canadian Labor Congress, has said.

Dodge said discussions will be on "what programs they might devise that we would be willing to participate in."

He made the comment in an interview taped Friday for use Sunday on the CTV public affairs program Question Period.

Dodge said labor-management discussion of anti-inflation measures might mean more than the "scatter-shot" national approach of the federal commission.

"It is possible that particular groups of unions in particular industries—steel, pulp and paper, forest unions—could have meaningful discussions with the leaders of those industries," he said.

"There could be some confrontation."

APPOINTMENT

Mr. N. C. (Cam) McCallum

Mr. D. Lawson, president of Empress Pontiac Buick Ltd., 2867 Douglas Street, is pleased to announce the appointment of Mr. N. C. (Cam) McCallum, as new car sales manager. Mr. McCallum comes to Victoria from Winnipeg with his family and many years of successful GM association. Customer satisfaction and fair dealing will continue to be the keynote at Empress where you can select from North America's most popular automobiles, family sedans, economy cars and imports to the high-performance sport models together with the famous GMC trucks. Come in soon and meet Cam McCallum at the dealership where most Victorians like to buy their cars again and again. On Douglas at Topaz, drive-in and park off Topaz.

FARO TOWNSITE
REQUIRES A
MUNICIPAL ADMINISTRATOR
Faro Townsite, located in the mining heart of the Yukon and servicing the recently developed Anvil Mining Properties, requires an Administrator, under the direction of the Municipal Affairs Director, to be responsible for the provision of all municipal services in the area. Upon attainment of village status, which is expected in the near future, it is anticipated that the Administrator will assume the position of Village Clerk under the direction of a local council.
The successful candidate will possess a Certificate in Municipal Administration supplemented by several years experience directly related to the position assignment.
The townsite itself consists of some 600 inhabitants who reside in colourful and modern duplexes, apartments and single family dwellings. Sewer, water and other municipal services are operational and the community will soon boast a nursing station and modern school and recreational facilities. Population of the rapidly growing community is projected at 1200 people for 1971. A new all-weather road links Faro with Whitehorse, the Territory's capital, where daily jet service connects the Yukon with both Southern Canada and Alaska.
Salary is negotiable and commensurate with training and experience to a maximum of $12,252 per annum. Complete career resumés should be submitted in confidence to:

MAKE A FORTUNE IN REAL ESTATE

The Canadian Property Managers Association offers a unique course designed for the man who wants to start with about $1,000. A distinguished group of Canadian real estate specialists, notably a lawyer, a municipal assessor, an accountant, a mortgage financier, a land surveyor, and others, have been gathered together to show how to appraise, to finance and how to compound small holdings into huge property blocks. Many papers that come with real estate, such as the Sheriff's Fee Certificate, are explained. Many documents are given out during the course. You will learn how to evaluate properties and the many ways to generate capital.

These courses have run for many years in Ottawa and now you can get a complete transcript and permanent written record of everything said there. Ten-week course includes books, all relevant papers and documents and a twenty-four ring binder to hold everything. Approved by the Federal Government for tax deduction of entire tuition.

Brandon Expects Lefley

BRANDON (CP) — Ron Maxwell, manager-coach of Brandon Wheat Kings, has announced that Chuck Lefley is to report to the Western Canada Hockey League team Monday.

Lefley, a 20-year-old speedy forward with Canada's National Hockey team, had asked for his release but the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association ruled the team still was in operation.

Lefley had wanted to join the Dauphin Kings of the Manitoba Junior Hockey League, but the ruling was that no member of the national squad could join any team affiliated with the CAHA.

The WCHL operates outside the CAHA.

Maxwell said he expected Lefley to be in the lineup for a game at Brandon Wednesday with Swift Current Broncos.

Lefley was playing this weekend with the national team in the exhibition series at Thompson, Man.

Tenpin Win For Pappas

MILWAUKEE (AP)—George Pappas of Charlotte, N.C., slammed a clutch strike in the 10th frame Saturday to win $10,000 and first place in the $70,000 Miller Open Bowling tournament.

It was the 22-year-olds Pappas' first victory on the Professional Bowlers Association tour, and he got it by knocking off Bobby Cooper, of Houston, 203-199, who also was after his first big check. Cooper's second place finish was worth $6,000.

Sprint to Wire Wins for Lund

DAYTONA BEACH (AP) — Husky Tiny Lund whizzed through a procession of wrecks, spins and yellow caution flags Saturday and won a battle of veteran drivers over Red Farmer in the Permatex 300-mile race for sportsman-type cars.

Lund beat Farmer by the length of his 1966 Ford as the last of seven caution flags was lifted on the fourth turn, giving the 51,300 spectators the thrill of a sprint to the finish over the last quarter-mile.

Bowling Roundup

Nanaimo in Spotlight

By KING LEE

Nanaimo's Fiesta Lanes takes the Island tenpin spotlight for the first two weekends in March.

For the 16th year the mixed doubles will be held and for the 18th time the men's singles will take place in the renovated Nanaimo house.

Shifts for March 7, 8, 14 and 15 will be 11 a.m., 1:00, 3:00, 5:00, 7:00 and 9 p.m.

The mixed doubles will be a three-game event. Scratch figure used for computing handicap will be 370 with the handicap based on two-thirds of the difference between the scratch figure and the combined averages as of March 1.

In the six-game singles, 200 will be used to compute the handicaps, on the same two-thirds basis.

Entry fee for the doubles is $7 per couple and for the singles is $10.

Entry forms are available at Fiesta Lanes in Nanaimo and Mayfair Lanes in Victoria.

Four teams and three individuals from Town and Country Lanes qualified for the provincial Youth Bowling Council fivepin championships, which will be held in Vancouver Feb. 28 and Mar. 1.

Best performance by Town and Country bowlers last Saturday was at Comox in the senior division as Gloria Crow and Rick Clarke took the singles titles with 707 and 703, respectively, and the boys team of Wayne Gill, Kim Buckley, Lee York, Bob Steele and Albert Crow was first with 3180 for three games. Comox's girls team of Wendy Ennis, Judy Hrechuk, Sue Ford, Jo Coffey and Cheryl Collier won with 2831.

Glasgow Upholds Tradition

Watford Surprises Liverpool To Reach FA Cup Semi-Final

GLASGOW (AP) — A man was stabbed and more than 50 fans were arrested today in riotous scenes at a Scottish Cup soccer game between Glasgow Celtic and Glasgow Rangers.

Celtic won, 3-1, before a sell-out crowd of 75,000 at Celtic Park Stadium and moved into the semi-finals of the Scottish Cup.

Massive police reinforcements moved in to deal with the crowd and the arrests began before the kickoff.

Such scenes are traditional at Celtic-Rangers clashes. The Roman Catholics of Glasgow support Celtic and Protestants shout for the Rangers.

The victim of the stabbing incident was Alan Brown, 21. Police did not give details. A hospital spokesman said later that Brown was comfortable.

LONDON (CP) — Lowly Watford shattered the First Division's long monopoly of the last four places in the English Football Association Cup race when it beat Liverpool, 1-0, Saturday in the major upset of the sixth-round soccer quarter-finals.

A goal at 63 minutes by Barry Endean before a record Watford crowd of 34,000 shattered Liverpool's hopes. Watford has been near the bottom of the Second Division.

NO OTHER UPSETS

The three other quarter-finals went as predicted, with Leeds United and Chelsea emerging as the strongest contenders for the trophy. Leeds, the reigning English champion, won, 2-0, at Swindon, with forward Allan Clarke scoring both goals within two minutes during the first half.

Chelsea star Peter Osgood netted three goals in a 4-2 victory over Second-Division Queen's Park Rangers. Manchester United, former European Cup champion, could manage only a 1-1 tie at Middlesbrough. The game will be replayed Wednesday.

Glasgow Celtic won the big cup battle in Scotland against Glasgow Rangers in a game marred by Roman Catholic and Protestant fans who brawled on the field. There also were fist fights between the players as Celtic, the Catholic-backed team, won, 3-1.

Celtic has won the cup 20 times to 19 for Rangers. Celtic has had the edge in recent clashes and beat the Protestant-supported Rangers in last season's final.

STARS SIDLINED

Liverpool's hopes of beating Watford dived before the kickoff when injuries kept Tommy Smith and Peter Thompson out of the game.

Leeds, chasing a remarkable triple target of English League and Cup and European Cup ties this season, never looked in danger of defeat after Clarke scored brilliantly in the 31st and 33rd minutes.

Queen's Park Rangers, beaten only once in their last 22 home games, were two goals down in the first eight minutes of their West London derby with Chelsea and could not make up the difference. Dave Webb put Chelsea ahead and Osgood got the next three goals. Terry Venables netted for Rangers with a twice-taken penalty and Barry Bridges got their second in front of a record crowd of more than 33,000.

Manchester United got an early goal by Carlo Sartori but John Hickton evened it for Middlesbrough, which nearly won in the closing stages when Hughie McIlmoyle hit the bar.

While Leeds was boosting its cup hopes, Everton failed to take maximum advantage in the English First Division race, being held to a 0-0 draw with Coventry.

Everton is one point behind Leeds. Coventry regained fourth place, ahead of Wolverhampton Wanderers, beaten 3-1 at home by Manchester City.

Beketa Keeps Firefighter Curling Title

Trail—Ed Beketa of Vancouver successfully defended his B.C. Firefighters curling championship with a 15-8 victory over Fran Shields of Dawson Creek Saturday.

Beketa will represent B.C. at the national finals at Shawnigan Falls, Que., March 31 and April 1, 2, and 3.

Third Barry Samson and second Bill Errington were part of Beketa's 1969 provincial championship rink but lead Dave Kelly is a replacement this season.

VICTORIA RINKS

In the championship event, Goerge Windsor of Richmond downed Dick Austin of Victoria, 10-7.

Austin then lost to Shields in the "A" semi-final, 11-8.

Revelstoke's Tom Needham eliminated Les Brice from further action with an 11-10, extra-end thriller over the Victoria rink.

Ron Jacobson of Richmond won "D" event by beating Ron Pierce of Victoria, 8-7, in the final.

Gary Player Dethroned

DUBAN (AP) — English professional Tommy Horton Saturday won the South African Open golf championship, the first non-South African ever to take the title.

Horton, 28, shot a final-round 72 at the Royal Durban course to finish with a five-under-par 285. He had earlier rounds of 75, 70 and 68 and was three shots ahead of Terry Westbrook of Rhodesia.

Gary Player, who has won the title the last five years, was never in the picture after a disastrous first-round 79 and finished seventh at 294.

Sweet Revenge

MIAMI (AP) — Hobeau Farms' Never Bow, getting sweet revenge on the favored Dike, sped to a smashing victory in the Widener Stakes at Hialeah Saturday. Dike, never in contention, finished a dismal ninth. Beau Brummel was second, Ship Leave third and Al Hattab fourth.

Even Ex-Prober Death Squad Member

RIO DE JANEIRO (AP)—A special police investigator said Saturday that a "death squad" detectives and prison wardens, tortured 11 persons with clubs, made them dig their own graves, then shot them.

Investigator Fernando Schwab told reporters of the killings after a seven-month probe into the squad's activities in Espirito Santo State. He said 19 persons have been charged with participating in the squad's activities, including four policemen, a law court official, a military police colonel, detectives and prison wardens.

Schwab said a local police chief previously in charge of investigating the squad's activities was among those charged. He said the death squad has also been operating in the Sao Paulo and Rio areas, where during the last two weeks five bodies of known bandits have been found riddled with bullets.

Schwab said the men had all been tortured and strangled with nylon cords. The killers left signs identifying themselves as the "Chinese" or "Vampire' sections of the organization, whose proclaimed aim is to wipe out banditry.

Calls on 'No-Phone' Produce No Phone Bill

LONDON (UPI)—Ernam Foster knew he had a telephone. He had used it 15 times to ask the Post Office how much he owed since it was installed last summer.

"But they have told me they cannot send me a bill because I have no telephone," Foster said. "I invited them to phone me, as proof, but they never did."

Hull Scores 500th Goal Bruins Catch Rangers

Bill White, obtained Friday from Los Angeles, gives Chicago's Tony Esposito help in blocking out an effort from New York's Bill Fairbairn. Fairbairn and Esposito are leading contenders for the NHL's rookie-of-the-year award.—(AP)

Bobby Hull of Chicago Black Hawks Saturday became the third player in National Hockey League history to reach the 500-goal plateau, at the same time helping Boston Bruins regain a share of first place in the torrid East Division race.

Hull scored his 27th and 28th goals of the season and 499th and 500th of his career, as the Hawks came from behind to defeat New York Rangers, 4-2. Bruins followed with a 4-2 victory over Minnesota North Stars to draw even with Rangers, who have a game in hand.

Hawks' victory kept them within one point of four-place Detroit Red Wings, who outscored Toronto Maple Leafs, 7-5. The Leafs are now 12 points out of fourth place.

ONLY OTHERS

Montreal Canadiens, who trail the co-leaders by five points, kept their three-point edge on Detroit with a 5-3 win over Philadelpha Flyers.

Only players to reach 500 goals previously were Detroit's Gordie Howe, who failed Saturday to add to his 752 total, and Montreal's Maurice Richard, who retired with 544 goals.

Hull's goals came less than eight minutes apart in the second period and sandwiched a goal by brother Dennis as Hawks bounced back from a 0-2 deficit. Ron Stewart and Bob Nevin scored for Rangers before the mid-way mark in the game but Tony Esposito blanked New York the rest of the way. Pit Martin provided Hawks' with insurance early in the third period.

Hawks now have two wins and three times with the Rangers this season in six meetings.

Today's game between Boston and Chicago will be telecast on Channels 7 and 12 starting at 11 a.m.

While Hull was achieveing his feat, Bobby Orr continued to set records.

He scored his 23rd and 24th goals of the season and drew one assist, his 67th of the season, running his league-leading point total to 91, all records for a defenceman.

The three points also boosted his lead over team-mate Phil Esposito, who picked up two assists, to 14 points.

ONE WIN IN 32

Stars, who have won only one of their last 32 games and who are winless in 18 games, put up stubborn resistance until Boston connected three times in a five-minute stretch of the third period.

Ken Hodge and Derek Sanderson were other Boston scorers while Jean Paul Parise and Tom Williams scored for Minnesota.

NEWCOMER HELPS

Wayne Connelly scored two goals and Dale Rolfe, acquired by Wings Friday from Los Angeles, drew three assists in the free-scoring game at Toronto. Wings took a 2-1 lead in the first period and made it 4-2 going into the third.

Garry Unger, with his 31st goal of the season, ex-Leaf Frank Mahovlich, with the winning goal, Pete Stemkowski, Nick Libett and Alex Delvecchio were the other Detroit scorers.

Ron Ellis, with his 26th and 27th of the season, Mike Walton, George Armstrong and Tim Horton scored for Toronto.

A pair of veterans powered Canadiens' win at Philadelphia and got valuable help from two relative newcomers to the Montreel organization.

Yvan Cournoyer scored his 18th and 19th goals and assisted on two others and Jean Beliveau scored once and drew three assists.

Larry Mickey, a former Maple Leag, who was called up from Montreal Voyagers earlier in the day, and Pete Mahovlich, drawn from Voyageurs earlier in the week, scored the other Canadien goals.

Jean Guy Gendron, with his 20th of the season, Gary Dornhoefer, with his 21st, and Terry Ball scored for Flyers.

BLUES TOP KINGS

Jim Roberts scored two goals, Red Berenson, his 27th of the season, and Bob Plager, his third, as St. Louis Blues stretched their West Division lead over Pittsburgh and Philadelphia to 16 points with a 4-2 win over the 'new look', but still inept, Los Angeles Kings. Ross Lonsberry scored both Kings' goals.

Gerry Ehman and Earl Ingarfield each scored two goals as Oakland Seals trimmed Pittsburgh to move within five points of second place.

Two Host Rinks Unbeaten In Alberni Valley Spiel

PORT ALBERNI — Charlie Haggard and Arie Leyenhorst of the host club were the only unbeaten skips when play in the men's bonspiel at the Alberni Valley Curling Club went into Saturday's late draw, which had been scheduled to meet in the quarter-finals in the Colonist (B primary) event.

Haggard ran his win streak to seven games by defeating clubmate Bill Wood, Ken Donison and Bob Cummings in the Colonist event.

Leyenhorst, who needed only three wins to reach the semi-finals in the Alberni Hardware (A primary) event, defeated clubmates Ray Street and Bob Price and Bill Wilkinson of Victoria in his march to the Colonist quarter-finals.

RIGHT OUT

Ray Tall and Brian Toms, who had veteran Bill Hall on the teehead, were not only beaten for the first time on Saturday but were dropped right out of the "B" side of the six-event competition.

Both rinks, which had reached the Alberni Hardware semis in the first 36 hours of the bonspiel, won their first games in the Colonist event then dropped two in a row.

Toms' rink lost first to Glen Phillips of Nanaimo and then to Ken Sturrock of Victoria. Tall was beaten by clubmate John Hartt and Warren Paul.

STILL IN COLONIST

Left with Leyenhorst and Haggard in the Colonist event are Hartt, Jim Marasco, Louis Houle, Earl Ewert and Ernie Patterson of the AVCC and Phillips.

Play in the Alberni Engineering (B secondary) and Bord Home Builders (B tertiary) events were scheduled to be out in the quarter-finals by this morning.

First to reach the eights were Street, Wood and Archie Dick of Port Alberni, Ron Dunn of Nanaimo, Rod Fisher of Vancouver and Vern Bowes of Victoria in the Alberni Engineering event and Wilkinson, Donison Tall, Bob Reid of Port Alberni and George Gudbranson of Ucluelet.

Alberta Team Sweeps Badminton Playdowns

Alberta swept all seven matches from B.C. Saturday in the Alberta-B.C junior girls beadminton playdowns at Victoria Racquet Club.

Susan Cutmore, Barb Alexander and Lorraine and Maureen Thorne of Calgary's Glencoe Club took three singles and four doubles matches from Esquimalt Badminton Club's Lyn and Sally Polson, Liz-Anne Ogden and Kathy Tuey.

Alberta will meet the winners of Saskatchewan-Manitoba for the right to enter the national final against the eastern representative.

New West	46	2	42	2	147	304	6

Next games: Tuesday—Vancouver at VICTORIA, 8:30 p.m., Memorial Arena; Penticton at Vernon.

Kamloops Rockets defeated the Royals, 4-3, in New Westminster and Penticton Broncos spoiled the Buckaroos final game of the season, 6-3, in Kelowna on Saturday in games which had no effect on the B.C. Junior Hockey League playoff structure.

The struggle for the top three playoff positions resumes Tuesday when third-place Vancouver Centennials play the leading Cougars in Victoria and Penticton plays the second-place Essos at Vernon.

Cougars defeated Simon Fraser University, 7-6, in Burnaby on Friday and Centennials lost to Mount Royal Cougars of the Alberta junior league, 5-3, Saturday in exhibition games.

Ex-Pitcher Dies

SCRANTON, Pa. (AP) — Joe Shaute, a former major league pitcher, died Saturday at the age of 70. Shaute, pitched for Cleveland, Brooklyn and Cincinnati in the 1920s and 30s. He had a 99-109 record over 13 years in the majors.

Three Schools Gain Island Hoop Finals

Three berths have been decided for the Vancouver Island junior high school boys' basketball championship March 6 and 7 in Campbell River.

Lansdowne, Elizabeth Fisher and Central finished in order on top of the Lower Island tournament Saturday at Colquitz to advance. One other team will go, the winner of a challenge match between fifth-place Colquitz and fourth-place Oak Bay at a date yet to be decided.

Lansdowne won the tournament with a 50-40 victory over Elizabeth Fisher after a 48-44 semi-final victory over Colquitz. Elizabeth Fisher defeated Central, 62-58, in their semi-final.

Central claimed its spot with a 59-48 victory over Colquitz while Oak Bay took fourth by defeating Dunsmuir, 58-45, after a 51-34 victory over Gordon Head. Dunsmuir had defeated S. J. Willis, 49-26.

S. J. Willis won the consolation game, 40-25, over Gordon Head.

DUNCAN RESULTS

In the Mid Island tournament at Mt. Prevost in Duncan, Woodlands of Nanaimo, Parksville, Chemainus, Ladysmith and Wellington of Nanaimo advanced to the mid-north competition next weekend at Courtenay. Top four teams there advance to the Island final.

Woodlands defeated Parksville, 53-34, in the final after a 34-30 semi-final win over Ladysmith. Parksville defeated Wellington, 47-36, in the other semi-final.

Qualicum eliminated Mt. Prevost, 41-30, and then was eliminated in turn by fourth-place Chemainus, 37-34, after Chemainus had stopped George Bonner of Mill Bay, 32-28. Ladysmith claimed third place by defeating Wellington, 35-34.

Laker Rally Edges Chemainus

CHEMAINUS — Lake Cowichan staged a fantastic last-quarter rally Saturday to win the Vancouver Island berth in the B.C. "A" high school boys' basketball championship with a 40-38 victory over Chemainus.

The Lakers, down 13-24 at the half and 22-38 going into the final quarter, advance to Princeton for the March 5, 6 and 7 championships for schools with less than 200 boys in grades 11 and 12.

Armijit Dhillon, who led lakers with 10 points, was chosen the most-valuable-player in the Island tournament.

Qualicum defeated Ladysmith, 74-49, in the consolation game.

Chi Cheng Steals Show

VANCOUVER (CP) — Chi Cheng of Taiwan, recently named the world's outstanding female track and field star, Saturday night broke the world record in the women's 50-metre hurdles, running the distance in 6.9 seconds.

Competing in the Achilles International Indoor Games, she topped the old mark of seven seconds flat set last year by Mamie Rallins of the United States. Miss Cheng also won the women's long jump at 20 feet, 8¼ inches, a Canadian open record.

She won a third event, the 50-metre dash, in 6.2 seconds.

Chris Hall Sparks Jayvees' Victory

VANCOUVER — University of Victoria Jayvees pulled away from a 33-33 halftime deadlock to defeat Killarney Community Centre, 78-69, Saturday in the opening game of the best-of-three B.C. junior men's basketball final.

Second and, if necessary, third games will be played next Saturday and Sunday at UVic.

Chris Hull sparked the second half drive with 16 of his 20 points as the shorthanded Jayvees finished with only five players after Gord Hoshal and Brent Mullin fouled out late in the game.

Fergie Andison of Jayvees led both teams with 21 points. Elgin Reid topped Killarney with 17 points.

The hosts had trouble with the one-three-one zone defence used by coach Gary Taylor's Jayvees, who were able to work effectively against the pressing defensive tactics of Killarney.

JAYVEES (78) — Rick Roberts, Mark Pratt 6, Tim Rieger 15, Fergie Andison 21, Gord Hoshal 13, Brent Mullin 3, Chris Hall 20.

KILLARNEY (69) — Elgin Reid 17, Paul Penderson 1, Tom Newman 10, Steve Harbrick 3, Blake Iverson 12, John Roscoe, Vic Coulture 5, Doug Marchuk 9, Richard Harbo, Glen Garratt, George Otto 9, Jim Marchuk 3.

Bruins Maul Thunderbirds

LOS ANGELES (CP) — University of California at Los Angeles Bruins mauled the University of British Columbia Thunderbirds, 21-3, Saturday to win the intercollegiate rugby world cup series. UCLA took a convincing 29-0 win Thursday in the first game of the two game total-point series.

Courtenay Top Seeded

COURTENAY — Georges Vanier of Courtenay won top seeding in the North Island high school boys' basketball zone Saturday by defeating Campbell River, 68-39, in the final of the four-team tournament.

Alberni, the winners of the McMillan-Bloedel Trophy as league champions, took third seeding over Nanaimo, 57-49.

Cowichan, the lone Mid-Island entry, now has the right to challenge any of the four northern teams for a berth in the Vancouver Island tournament next Friday and Saturday at University of Victoria. The game will be played Tuesday in Duncan.

In Friday's opening games played in Alberni, Vanier downed the hosts 53-50, and Campbell River stopped Nanaimo, 64-40.

World Record

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Lee Evans streaked to a world record of 54.5 seconds in the 500-yard run at the San Diego Indoor Games Friday night, knocking nine-tenths of a second off the pending standard.

Bisons, T-Birds Move to Final

University of Manitoba Bisons and UBC Thunderbirds wrapped up their semi-final series of the Western Canada Intercollegiate Athletic Association men's basketball league in straight games Saturday with home-court wins.

The undefeated Thunderbirds grabbed a 49-28 halftime lead on the way to a 97-56 victory over University of Victoria Vikings after winning Friday's opener, 96-74.

Bisons, 77-62 victors over University of Alberta Golden Bears on Friday, followed up with an 80-61 victory Saturday.

Bob Molinski, with 23 points, and Ron Thorsen, with 21, led UBC. Corky Jossul topped Vikings with 13 points in the team's final game of the season.

VIKINGS (56) — Corky Jossul 13, Brian Brumwell 6, Tom Child 7, Skip Cronck 11, Barry Burch 2, Stan Piper 2, John McKeachie 5, Al Glover 2, Tom Hatcher 8, Mike Taaffe.

UBC (97) — Alex Brayden 14, Bob Molinski 23, Rod Matheson 2, Joe Kainer 4, John Hawkins 6, Derek Sankey 8, Jack Hoy 4, Ron Thorsen 21, Terry McKay 12, John Mills 2.

UVic Club Tops Volleyball Play

University of Victoria defeated Canadian Forces Base Esquimalt in the final to win the Royal Roads invitational volleyball tournament Saturday at CFB Naden gymnasium.

Esquimalt was undefeated in the nine-team preliminary round-robin play while UVic captured the other final berth by finishing second with a 7-1 record.

Members of the winning team were Bruce Smith, Jim Barker, Ken Lundeen, Nimby Sihota, Jim Wylie, Wayne Forland, Clay Jones and Greg Russell.

CFB Comox, CFB Kamloops, CFB Calgary, Victoria YMCA, Vancouver MARCs, Victoria High School and Royal Roads participated in the one-day event.

Next games: Tonight—Vancouver at San Diego; Salt Lake City at Portland.

Phoenix Roadrunners scored the first four goals on the way to a 5-2 Western Hockey League win over leading Vancouver Canucks Saturday at Phoenix.

For Canucks, currently on a 23-game home winning streak, it was only the second loss in two weeks.

Last-place Salt City Golden Eagles battled Seattle Totems to a 3-3 tie in Seattle.

Larry Lund led Roadrunners with two goals. Bill Snow, Jim Paterson and Frank Hughes got one each for Phoenix. Murray Hall and Gerry Goyer scored for Canucks.

Bob Heaney, Ted Hodgson and Gerry Mazue scored for Eagles. Don Ward, Art Stratton and Marc Bolleau got Totems' goals.

Peninsula Basketball

View Royal won the midget boys playoffs in Peninsula Basketball Association with a 20-17 win at Brentwood Bay Community Hall Friday.

View Royal took the two-game, total-point series, 54-34.

Brentwood won the opening game of a two-game, total-point bantam girls series, 41-10, over Cordova Bay. Final game is scheduled for Wednesday at Cordova Bay Community Hall.

Connelly Sets World Record

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Harold Connolly, 1956 Olympic hammer throw champion, bettered the world outdoor record in the 35-pound weight throw for distance in a track and field meet at Long Beach State College. Connolly tossed the weight 72 feet, 2¾ inches. The official world mark is 68 feet, six inches set by George Frenn in 1968.

Saanich Wins

Saanich edged Esquimalt, 5-4, Saturday in a peewee pup hockey game at G. R. Pearkes Arena.

Steady Barrage By Powell River

Dave Maynard of Saanich stopped 108 shots Saturday but it wasn't enough to stop Powell River from advancing to today's 2 p.m. final of the Vancouver Island juvenile hockey championship tournament at Victoria Racquet Club.

Powell River handed Saanich its first defeat, 12-3, when the Saanich team managed only 19 shots on the opposition net.

Saanich drops into the losers' bracket final at 9 a.m. against Racquet Club with the winner meeting Powell River in the sudden-death final.

Racquet Club stayed alive early Saturday with a 5-2 victory over Victoria and then scored three goals in the last three and one-half minutes to eliminate Comox, 5-3.

Comox defeated Nanaimo, 3-0, with Craig Bale getting the shutout, to reach the losers' bracket semifinal against Racquet Club.

Saturday scorers:

COMOX (3) — Rick Pearson 2, Don Pavalik; NANAIMO (0).

RACQUET CLUB (5) — George Biggs 2, Pete Mason, Greg Bunyan, Dave Osborn; VICTORIA (2) — Laurie Huck, Craig Darling.

POWELL RIVER (12) — Jack Richardson 3, Bob Rice 4, Mike McKenzie, Mark Stevens, Pete Frazer, Dean Sauve, Jim Humphrey; SAANICH (3) — Mike Baier, Bill Karaim, Pete Furnell.

RACQUET CLUB (5) — Dave Metcalf 3, Pete Mason, George Biggs; COMOX (3) — Les Bale, Doug Kines, Randy Robinson.

Esquimalt In Final At Comox

COMOX — Powell River meets Port Alberni this morning at 8:30 a.m. for the right to meet Esquimalt in the 11:00 final of the Vancouver Island midget hockey championship tournament.

Esquimalt reached the final by defeating Nanaimo, 5-3, Saturday in overtime.

Powell River, which stayed alive earlier in the day by eliminating Victoria Racquet Club, 9-4, to move into the losers' bracket final with Port Alberni, which ousted Victoria, 8-1.

Victoria eliminated Comox, 7-6, in the other game Saturday.

Ron Cerrudo's shot from behind this palm tree on the eighth hole landed in a sand trap Saturday and he bogeyed the hole. However, the 25-year-old Napa, Calif., pro carded a 69 for the day and boosted his San Antonio lead to four strokes.—(AP)

Ron Cerrudo Adds Stroke To San Antonio Golf Lead

SAN ANTONIO, (AP) — Young Ron Cerrudo scrambled in with a one under par 69 Saturday and stretched his three-round lead to four strokes in the $100,000 San Antonio Open golf tournament.

Cerrudo, who finished a little shakily, had a 54-hole score of 205, five under par.

Veteran Rod Funseth, who started the day just one stroke back, went two over on the first hole and finished with a two-over-par 72 for 209 and second place.

Cerrudo, a handsome young Californian, appeared ready to run away and hide from the field until he ran into trouble on the closing holes.

He bogeyed the 16th from a trap, and was talking to himself as he stomped up the fairway. He put his second shot on No. 17 into the gallery and was pounding a club on the ground in frustration.

But he chipped to within 10 feet, and ran in the putt to stay well in front.

The miserable playing conditions that prevailed for the first two rounds improved considerably, particularly for the late-starting leaders.

BIGGEST GAIN

Dick Lotz made the greatest gain, fashioning a course-record matching 65 to vault into a tie for third place at 210, even par. He was tied with Lou Graham, who had a 69.

John Schlee also had a share of third until he bogeyed the last hole, finishing with a 71 and 211. He was tied at that figure with Miller Barber, 67, and Rich Martinez 69.

U.S. Open champion Orville Moody had a 68 for 215, Lee Trevino a 70 for 217, Dave Hill a 71 for 213 and Frank Beard 72 for 216.

FUNSETH LUCKY

"I think I'm lucky to still be in second place, the way I started," said Funseth.

"I'm satisfied with my round," Cerrudo said. "I played pretty steady. I think the key to it was an 18-foot birdie putt on the third. I'd just missed one from three feet and bogeyed the second. Well, to come back with that 18-footer kind of gives you a lift."

He said he had no plans of playing it safe in today's final round.

MUST BE AGGRESSIVE

"You've got to be aggressive to win," he said. "You start playing safe and the field's going to go right by you."

Cerrudo, whose only tour victory was the Cajun Classic in his rookie season, 1968, started a string of three consecutive birdies with the long putt on the third hole of the 7138 yard, par-70 Pecan Valley Golf Club course.

He put a seven-iron shot three feet from the pin on the next hole and canned a 30-foot putt on the fifth hole. But he bogeyed the eigth hole from a trap.

His only other birdie came on the par five 13th hole, when he wedged to within three feet and made the putt.

Firefighters Edge O'Keefes

By KEVAN HULL

Dave Hutton, one of the outstanding clutch players in the Pacific Coast Soccer League, came through again Saturday at Macdonald Park to give Vancouver Firefighters a 2-1 overtime victory over Victoria O'Keefes.

The veteran halfback snapped O'Keefes' unbeaten streak at 16 games and knocked the Victorians out of the Inter-League Cup competition in the sudden-death second round.

Hutton's goal came eight minutes into the first half of the 30-minute overtime session after referee Bill Miller of Vancouver awarded a free kick to Vancouver near the left corner in Victoria territory.

Dan Rosengren's low drive was deflected away from the Victoria defenders by Jim Goodheart and Hutton came crashing through to smack the ball into the middle of the net.

OPENING GOAL

Firefighters had taken the lead in the first half when game-standout Bob Sedgewick blasted a 28-yard drive through a maze of players after Peter Brett had blocked a Vancouver free kick at 42 minutes.

O'Keefes had opened strongly but heavy hitting by the Vancouver defence led by centre-half Bob Mills disrupted the Victorians until the final 15 minutes of regular time.

Victoria appeared to have saved its streak, which included 11 regular-schedule games, when Howie Anderson scored the tying goal at 83 minutes.

MOVED TO FORWARD

Moved to forward minutes earlier by coach Frank Grealy, the young fullback beat Mike Gilmour cleanly with a header on a cross from Jim Menzies.

The match had opened on a promising note with both clubs showing some fast-breaking attacks, but Miller's handling of the game spoiled the match for both teams and the 561 spectators.

O'Keefe officials indicated that they would make a strong protest at a Monday league meeting in Vancouver over the job done by Miller and linesmen Frank Seymour and Tom Miller, also of Vancouver.

"It's time we had some of our Victoria officials working our games again," said an irate Grealy. "They played well enough to win, all right, but this bunch spoiled the game."

Both Firefighters and O'Keefes lost ground in the league standings with Westminster Blues defeating UBC Thunderbirds, 5-3, and Eintracht drawing, 1-1, with North Shore Labatts in Mainland matches.

The win moved Blues to within one point of the third-place O'Keefes and eliminated the sixth-place Firefighters from the playoffs. Firemen trail Westminster by seven points with only three matches remaining.

Eintracht, which moved a point ahead of Firefighters, has four games left as has Westminster.

McLain's Mates Leery

LAKELAND, Fla. (AP) — Is Denny McLain being given the cold shoulder by his Detroit Tiger teammates?

At first glance, it would seem so. But according to catcher Jim Price, a close friend of McLain's and Detroit's player-representative, the players are just leery over the situation surrounding McLain's indiefinite suspension from baseball.

"They're all leery over this thing and I think that's why they haven't been out to see Denny," Price said.

The 25-year-old star pitcher has been in semi-seclusion with his wife, his children, and his brother, Tim, at his modest but attractive ranch-style home on the outskirts of Lakeland.

His teammates started spring baseball training Friday on the other side of town.

ONLY VISITOR

Price, who is backup catcher to Bill Freehan, played golf with McLain Saturday. Price said to his knowledge, he is the only player who has seen Denny since McLain was suspended Thursday by baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn.

Kuhn said the suspension was beeause of "involvement in 1967 bookmaking activities," and said the suspension would remain until his office completed a probe of the matter.

"My teammate is in trouble and I wanted to talk to him," Price said.

"Denny called me yesterday and said he wanted to meet with the players," he continued. "Now that shows me something. He is interested enough to want to talk to his teammates about this whole situation.

TALKED IT OVER

"We talked it over and decided it would be best to wait until there is a word on the suspension from the commissioner's office. Personally, I think there will be a word within a couple of days because I think they are about through with the investigation," Price said.

Although his teammates have seemingly been shunning McLain, Price said he felt "they're all 100 per cent behind him."

"We've talked about it and there's a general feeling among the players that Denny does owe them some kind of explanation," he added.

Tiger first basemen Norm Cash said he hasn't seen or spoken with McLain.

ENOUGH CONTACT

"Evidently, he's had enough contact with people lately," Cash said.

"Even his teammates?" he was asked.

"Yes, we can't help him," Cash said. "He'll just have to get out of this himself."

"I'd rather not say anything about it," said fellow pitcher Earl Wilson. "I don't know where he lives even. How am I going to go out and see him?"

WILL BE READY

Price said he thought McLain would stay in Lakeland so that when Kuhn says something definite about the suspension, McLain would be ready to join the Tigers in training if he were allowed to do so.

Manager Mayo Smith says he hasn't seen or spoken with McLain either.

Meanwhile, the Tigers worked out for three hours Saturday in their second spring practice.

Courtenay Rink Still Unbeaten

WHITE ROCK (CP) — Dave Patterson's rink from Courtenay remained unbeaten through three rounds of the Elks provincial curling playoffs Saturday.

The playoff concludes today with the winner advancing to the Canadian final in Dauphin, Man. Six of the eight starting rinks remained in contention late Saturday.

Oregon Ducks Upset Vikings

EUGENE, Ore. (Special) — Jim Rainier's 45-yard penalty goal in the dying minutes gave University of Oregon Ducks and upset 11-8 victory over University of Victoria Vikings in Pacific Northwest Collegiate Rugby Conference play.

It was the first conference loss in two season for the defending-champions, who play the Oregon State Beavers in Corvallis on Monday. Vikings won their first two matches this season.

The teams were tied, 8-8, at the intermission with Viking points coming from two trys by Jim Wenman and a convert by Al Foster. Ducks scored on a try by Terry Logan, which was converted by Rainier, and a drop goal by Tony Evans.

UVic Norsemen remained undefeated after three games in the second division, downing the Oregon second XV, 14-13, after holding a 6-3 halftime lead.

Stu Bailey led Norsemen with two penalty goals and a convert. Tom Conti and Chris Bennett added trys.

Oregon scored on trys by Stan Knight, Mike Donovan and Pat O'Keefe and two converts by Barry Clarke.

Coho Swim Club Tops Olympians

Juan de Fuca Cohoes won the city club swimming championship in a dual meet with Victoria Olympians, 795-710, Saturday at Colwood Centennial Pool, claiming the City of Victoria Trophy for the first time.

Dianne Smedley, Greg Reeves and Dale Long each scored for individual victories to lead Cohoes. Top Olympians were Judy Thompson, with four victorib, and Jim Gollmer, with three.

Miss Smedley and Greg Stone, a double-winner for Olympians, won the Todd Trophies for the 16-and-under individual medley events.

Canadian Legion Cups for the open relay events were won by the Cohn girls' team and Olympian boys.

Lynn Ridley, Marj Treby, Dale Aylward and Ted Packford each added two wins to the Coho total. Winners of single events were Linda Roer, Susan Cameron, Jan Mason, Jan Crook and Buddy Flett.

Denise Brownsey, Mary-Pat Pumfrey, Carey Busfield, Carol Taylor and Billy Mollard were other double winners for Olumpians. Winning once each were Heather Campbell, George Gollmer, Bill Sherwood, Nick Borrelly, Stephen Davis and Phil Gay.

Cohoes won nine of 16 relay events.

Tally Ho Flexes Muscles

Graham Taylor scored three goals as last-place Tally Ho beat Hourigans, 5-2, in a Victoria and District Soccer League first division match Saturday at Heywood Avenue Park.

It was the second win in 19 matches this season for Tally-Ho, who got other goals from Dean Stokes and Dexter Mason. Stu Wallace and Barry Moen got Hourigans' goals.

In the second division, Causeway Hotspurs broke out of a three-way deadlock for fourth place by blanking Tillicums, 2-0, at Carnarvon Park. Clinton Hollefreund and Andy Blythe scored for the winners.

Some Rally!

University School scored 25 unanswered points in the second half Saturday at Royal Roads to defeat the military college, 28-13, in an exhibition rugby match.

Alberta Retains Gymnastic Title

Tim Sedgewick of University of Saskatchewan was the individual star Saturday at the Western Canada Intercollegiate Athletic Association men's gymnastic championships at University of Victoria, but University of Alberta successfully defended the team title.

Alberta finished with 125.75 points for a comfortable lead over runner-up UBC, which had 100.4 points. Following in order were University of Calgary (91.3), Saskatchewan (76.8), UVic (47.65) and University of Manitoba (36.1).

Sedewick won the floor exercise, still rings and parallel bars, finished second in the side horse and vaulting and was fourth in the high bar to finish with 40.25 points.

Side-horse champion Don Miekle of Alberta was runner-up with 36.65 points followed by vaulting champion Gary Balcomb of Saskatchewan at 36.5.

Rick Shore of Manitoba and Aldo di Giovani of UBC, the high-bar winner, tied for fourth with 36.1 points.

The five will be joined by Paul Cooper of Alberta, the sixth-place finisher at 30.65, as the WCIAA representatives in the Canadian collegiate championships March 6 and 7 in Edmonton.

Sooke meals-on-wheels dishes up Vitamin C

(that's Companionship)

Happiness is helping others: Margaret Money cooks up a stew

Companionship can provide as many vitamins for the lonely as a meal, says Phyllis Johnson, president of Sooke Old Age Pensioners Association.

That's the reason for some important differences between the Sooke Meals on Wheels program and those in other areas.

In Sooke the wheels are placed under those in need instead of under the meals.

Meals are prepared and served and transportation arranged by the pensioners themselves.

And, incidentally, at 35 cents a meal, the three-year-old project is showing a profit.

During the first two years of operation the pensioners raised enough money from meals, sale of handicrafts and through community support to buy 5¾ acres of land for a housing project.

There is now another $2,800 in the bank to be put into the housing as soon as construction starts.

"Our members raise hundreds of dollars through their own efforts — knitting, hat making and dressing dolls," said Mrs. Johnson.

"And with about 40 old people turning up twice a week to the meals we're able to put another $80 a month or so in the bank."

"But our real profit doesn't show on the books, it shows in the old people in Sooke.

"Those who are able are busy helping others. They are useful, not just sitting on the shelf from day to day. They have a purpose in life and people who care and it shows in their attitude.

"We try to take them out to picnics, or into Victoria to the theatre, and our biggest need is for a little van, because its hard to get people out of wheel chairs into ordinary cars," said Mrs. Johnson.

Professor of undress shows students how

Ecdysiastism Made Easy

Navel Academy Bumps Along

DENVER, Colo. (AP)—Christel came to school and, as usual, started taking off her clothes.

Lots of pretty girls take off their clothes at Christel's school. It's a school for ecdysiasts. That means strip teasers.

"Ecdysiast is better than saying stripper or peeler," said Sid King, the school's owner and only professor, who claims he's been training girls to undress in public for more than 15 years.

A CEREMONY

Stripping is an art, a ceremony, said King. "It's a combination of posing, strutting, dancing and punctuating from time to time by thrusts and twists of the abdomen."

That means bumps and grinds.

Classes at "Sid King's Crazy Horse College of Exotics" are quite as specific as the tongue-in-cheek enrollment applications listing the curriculum, he hands out to women who visit his Crazy Horse Bar, a Denver landmark where the current top attraction is Shari Scott, a young woman with a 52 - inch bustline who got her training under King.

THE CURRICULUM

● History and theory of the strip tease. "Did you know stripping started in America with the British Dollies in 1850? They wore tights instead of G-strings, but that was really sexy then."

● Psychology of inhibitions. "You've got to have confidence. All girls want to strip, sooner or later."

● Elementary bumps and grinds. That's those punctuating thrusts and twists of the abdomen."

● Methodology of teasing, tantalizing and titillating. "Every girl has her own style. I always say, 'Take off a little bit. If that don't make a hit, take off a little bit more.' "

● Applied sensual communication. "Smile. Look the customer in the eye. Hypnotize him. Move like you're making love."

● Dynamic mammary, navel and pelvic rotation and oscillation. That takes practice.

STRIP FOR PAY

King said lots of women, many with husbands, fill out the application. Some walk in off the street. Many are divorcees whose with children to support. Some are helping husbands through college. All told, he said, about 150 women a year strip for pay in his place.

There's no tuition at what King calls the "Navel Academy of the west." A beginner usually strips before an audience by the second or third day on the job. At King's they make $100 to $300 a week, depending on audience reaction.

"Sure, I like to dance," said Christel Kauschke, a 22-year-old mother with long, blond hair who came to the United States three years ago from Bavaria. "But I wouldn't do it if it weren't for the money. I couldn't make this much as a secretary, and the hours 7 p.m. until 2 a.m. are good."

Mount Douglas, Gordon Head

Sunday Concerts Launched

By BERT BINNY

Sunday afternoon school band concerts at the McPherson Playhouse are coming on apace.

There's one today and three more on the first three Sundays in March. And neither April nor May are without them.

Today it's the turn of Mount Douglas senior and Gordon Head junior secondary schools with both directed by Emile Michaux.

There are, in fact, two Gordon Head bands. The Green band travels from Gloucester (Three Ayres from Gloucester) to South America (Calypso Holiday).

Also sounding most attractive is a suite of old vaudeville favorites including My Gal Sal, Sweet Adeline, In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree and — appropriately — The Band Played On.

The Gordon Head Gold band follows much the same route: from England for an English Masters' Suite to Brazil for Beguine. But they are also in France for Offenbach's Ballet Parisien and in Japan for Japanese Fantasy. Somewhat more classical is their Concerto Grosso by Vivaldi.

ROUSING PRELUDES

And both bands play rousing preludes.

Following the intermission the Mount Douglas band plays the selection, Warwick, and follows this up with a suite containing such well-remembered items as Makin' Whoopee, Nobody's Sweetheart, Love Me or Leave Me and On the Alamo. This band also visits Paris and, in particular, the Louvre for a suite of ancient airs by Norman Dello Joio. Yet another suite is Chitty Chitty Bang Bang with eight melodies included.

The famous Dominique by the Singing Nun is also on the program as well as an overture-type composition, Festivo which features the percussion section.

And curtain time for all this is 2:30 p.m.

Hello Dolly Says Merman

TORONTO (CP) — Singer Ethel Merman says she will take over the lead in Broadway's Hello Dolly, a role originally created for her, this April.

Miss Merman, who flew here Friday to tape a radio commercial, said producer David Merrick of Hello Dolly has agreed to put into the show some songs originally written for it but discarded when she turned down the part.

Miss Merman had rejected the part because she had just finished starring in Gypsy and needed a rest. Carol Channing accepted the role.

Wedding Off Gina Says

ROME (UPI) — Film star Gina Lollobrigida said Saturday she would not marry U.S. businessman George Kaufman after all.

The Italian news agency ANSA quoted the actress as saying in a telephone conversation from New York they decided their mentalities were too different for married life.

"In connection with alleged statements attributed to myself and George Kaufman, which have appeared in the international press and regarding the date of our wedding . . . I want to state officially once and for all that I will not marry George Kaufman but will retain friendly relations with him," Miss Lollobrigida said.

BIG DIFFERENCE

ANSA said she explained she made the decision some time ago "because of the enormous difference of mentality" between herself and Kaufman. She said her stay in the United States led her to realize their mentalities "reflect the views of two different, diametrically opposed worlds."

The announcement came 11 days after Miss Lollobrigida told ANSA she once turned down a marriage proposal by Dr. Christiaan Barnard. She and the heart transplant surgeon were seen together frequently in recent years.

Abe Horns In On Family Plan

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—Abe Torchinsky, his wife and tuba flew to Sarasota Springs, N.Y. Saturday on the family plan.

Torchinsky, who has played tuba for the Philadelphia Orchestra for 21 years, paid the full fare for himself, three-quarters fare for his wife and half fare so the tuba could have a seat of its own.

He explained he was afraid the tuba might be harmed if it was put in the baggage compartment since he only has a soft leather case for it.

HY GARDNER

Q: Wasn't there once a TV series titled Billy the Kid? If so, who was Billy?—Tim Gaygiel, Madison, Wis.

A: NBC called the 1960-62 series Tall Man. It starred Gulager as Billy the Kid and Barry Sullivan as Sheriff Pat Garrett. They were both shot down by that sharpshooting program assassin—"Killer" Nielsen.

Q: Is it true that Barbra Streisand, before she hit it big, used to grow her own salads in her Brooklyn backyard?—L.P.R., Seattle.

A: I suppose you could call it that. Barbra grew the makings in flowerpots atop her modest penthouse in mid-Manhattan—lettuce, scallions, radishes, tomatoes, etc. They flourished even in freezing weather, soaking up sunshine—via sunlamps!

Q: Who coined the expression "rhubarb" as applied to baseball?—T.C.M., St. Louis.

A: Red Barber, in 1939, while broadcasting a Dodger game, said in referring to an argument on the diamond, "What a rhubarb!" Although the Redhead claims the expression originated with a Brooklyn bartender, overhard by sportswriter Tom Meany who relayed it to his confreres, it was Barber who popularized it on radio and authored two books using "rhubarb" in the title. "Even during The Second World War,"he notes, "it became a favorite word with war correspondents who referred to all kinds of snafus as rhubarbs."

Q: What's this about green blood donated to blood banks by women whose blood has turned green from taking the pill? It's frightening.—Miriam B., Memphis.

A: Calm down—it's the plasma (normally yellow), not the blood. Much of the green plasma recently observed at Stanford University's Medical Centre station was from females on the pill. "It is possible that these green-plasma units cause deleterious effects," explains Dr. Paul Wolf of the institution's clinical lab, "but at present we believe they are suitable for transfusions. No untoward acute effects or transfusion reactions have resulted from their use from our blood bank."

Q: Recently paroled bank robber Willie Sutton—didn't he once create a foundation to aid juvenile delinquents and the wives and children of men behind bars?—Mike Cullen, Cincinnati.

A: Yes. He called it the Willie Sutton Helping Hand Fund. In picking a committee of trustees, he included one of his lawyers, a member of the parole board, and the judge who sentenced him. Then as an afterthought, he said, "Sentimentally, there's one other trustee I'd like—somebody from the Manufacturers Trust Co. I think I owe them a little something because I stuck up one of their branches!" (The bank reports it has no record of ever having had any executive so honored.)

Q: How many actors played Henry Higgins in the Broadway company of My Fair Lady?—Don Stodder, Miami, Fla.

A: Three. Rex Harrison created the role, Edward Mulhare (now the ghost with Mrs. Muir) followed. Then English actor Michael Allinson played the part (some 1,200 times) on Broadway and in John Kenley productions in theatres and tents throughout the country. Allinson even signs his autographs " 'Enry 'Iggins."

Bastion Given Council Grant

By BILL THOMAS

BILL THOMAS

For the fourth time the Canada Council has made Bastion Theatre a small grant to cover the cost of hiring an outside director for one of its productions.

Sam Payne of Vancouver who previously directed the company's production of Caesar and Cleopatra will direct an original Canadian play by Samuel Taylor titled The Happy Time.

This play will reunite five people connected with the original Totem Theatre productions of the show in Vancouver and Victoria. They are Sam Payne, Peter Mannering, Jack Droy, Stuart Baker, and John Richards. The cast of this production of The Happy Time also includes Ramona McBean, Markyta Mares, Phyllis Gaskell, Barry Grimshaw, John Martin, Tom Cox, Matt Webster and Suzanne Salmon.

The set for The Happy Time which runs March 6 to March 14 at the McPherson Playhouse is by Jack Trueman and the costume designs are by John Heath.

The Victoria Guild will hold a discussion period following a one-act play to be performed by the Yellow Point Players at 8 p.m. tonight in the Langham Court Theatre. The discussion of the production will be led by Professor John Crich who recently played the title role in Strindberg's drama The Father at Langham Court Theatre.

The Victoria Theatre Guild will not be entering a play in the regional competition of the Dominion Drama Festival. "We feel at this time we should concentrate on developing the acting talent within the Theatre Guild rather than attempting competitions" said Theatre Guild president Mary Jane Scott.

The Rotary Boys' Choir will offer a concert at 8 p.m. Friday in the Fellowship Hall of Emmanuel Baptist Church, 1900 Fernwood. The choir of more that 35 voices will offer a program of sacred and secular music including a number of solos.

The series of art lectures sponsored jointly by the University of Victoria and the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria will continue in the MacLaurin Building at 8 p.m. Wednesday when Denis Bowen will discuss The Unconscious and Its Role. Mr. Bowen recently joined the Faculty of Fine Arts of the University of Victoria and is a painter with an international reputation. He will survey aspects of art which deal with personal and sometimes universal subconscious imagery. Mr. Bowen will examine such movements as surrealism, automatism, and abstract expressionism.

Yippie leader Abbie Hoffman whose starring performance during his trial for the disturbances during the Democratic convention in Chicago earned him a jail term, is also the star of a recently released National Film Board of Canada production.

The film titled Prologue was directed by Robin Spry and it delves into the turmoil among today's youth. Yippie leader Hoffman plays himself and New York Post critic Archer Winsten praised the footage of the riots at the convention saying that as a straightforward view of the long-haired protesters and idealists. Prologue can be placed in the record of our times as an Exhibit A.

Hoffman, the controvertialist demonstrates he has a flair for bold speech in front of a camera as well as in a street demonstration.

The National Film Board production has won universal critical acclaim and drew rave reviews at film festivals in Venice, London, and Delhi. It is interesting that while the federal government, through the Canada Council, is handing out money like water to some of the country's mediocre cultural enterprises it is stunting the growth of the National Film Board of Canada which has an international reputation for artistic quality that surpasses anything else the country has to offer. Alongside the National Film Board the National Ballet and the Royal Winnipeg Ballet are still cavorting around the maypole.

Man to Man Talk

Totem pole at Ninstints Village on Anthony Island, off Queen Charlotte Islands, is being examined by biologist David Hancock. Village is featured in color film Coast Safari, which has had 14 sellout showings in Victoria. It may be seen at 8 p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday at McPherson Playhouse.

Vienna Offering Cute and Boring

By BILL THOMAS

If anyone were looking for a one-word description for the Vienna Boys Choir then cute would do and if a second word were needed then boring would fill the bill.

The 22-member ensemble directed by Albert Anglberger drew a crowd of over 2,100 to Memorial Arena for a concert Saturday but I doubt if this kind of support could be repeated in the light of the performance.

Children have everything going for them in any kind of public appearance. Often they start slowly and build as they go along. With the Vienna Boys Choir the reverse happened. The first group of songs was musically entrancing. The voices were pure and soared even in the great cavern that doubles as a concert hall.

PERFECT OFFERINGS

The vocal quality of the ensemble is ideally suited to the works of Purcell and Handel. These offerings were perfect and the arangement of Psalm 131 by the choir's director was a delight. After that it was pretty well downhill.

A one-act chamber opera by Offenbach was a bust. There were moments of humor in it but most of it went up into the leaky roof. There were times when the first five rows down on the ice were laughing while the rest of us just wondered.

BAD CHOICE

This was just a bad choice of material from any standpoint. First the boys can't act and secondly they can't project lines. When they sang it was tolerable — just, but for the rest it was like a high school skit with the gym teacher directing.

The audience appluaded but with respect and tolerance rather than enthusiasm.

FOLK SONGS

The concluding items included the Franz Schubert Pastorale, Happiness and a selection of folk songs with the Strauss perennial Blue Danube as a closer.

The Red Army Chorus can sing up a storm in Memorial Arena but it's just not for 22 little boys. They sound like bats in a giant cave. It's painful to knock a group of kids who like to sing but if Sol Hurok is your promoter then the audience has a right to expect top flight professionalism.

Seattle To Get Hair

SEATTLE (AP) — Hair, the "tribal love-rock musical" that has stirred controversy with its nude scenes in six U.S. cities and Canada, will open here April 18.

The play will be produced here by Michael Butler, the show's original producer, in cooperation with the Seattle-based Northwest Releasing Corp.

The production, to be staged at the renovated Moore Theatre, is expected to cost about $300,000. The musical will play eight times a week and run as long as it attracts profitable audiences.

'Pudding' Names Singer

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (UPI) — The Hasty Pudding Theatricals of Harvard University has named singer Dionne Warwick its woman of the year.

A spokesman for the nation's oldest collegiate theatrical organization said it was the first time the award had gone to a singer in the honor's 20-year history.

Bermuda Chills Love Ship

HAMILTON, Bermuda (Reuters) — Bermuda's minister of tourism has turned thumbs down on a proposal by a New York firm for a floating "love-in" aboard a Greek Line ship.

David Wilkinson said "we are unalterably opposed" to an idea by Love Promotions Inc., to let U.S. teenagers see "what it's like beyond the 12-mile limit" for three days next month aboard the ship Queen Anna Marie.

The firm said the event would be one featuring: "No hassle, no pollution, no phones, no phonies. Groove on beautiful music, beautiful people, beautiful food. Do your thing or somebody else's."

You're Going to Europe?

Linger in England

By PERCY ROWE
Telegram Travel Editor

Let us suppose you are not one of the 346,000 Canadians who visited Britain last year.

You are 20, a stenographer, with $500 you have saved. Or a couple whose teenagers will be working this summer. Or just retired, and about to celebrate this event.

This is the big one — your first trip abroad. Sometime in 1970 you will be in Europe looking down on Paris from the Eiffel Tower, seeing that Pisa's tower does indeed lean, sailing on a Rhine steamer.

Take a tip: Go to Britain first, if only for a few days. For Britain is abroad, but not foreign.

COMFORTABLE PLACE

You, the stranger, the first-time European traveler, will be comfortable there. For one thing — an overriding thing — they speak the same language. And despite their shillings and pence, you probably know more about their currency than centavos or groschen.

Then, the systems are so similar — parliamentary, judicial and so on. There are neither extremes of cold nor heat, so you can do your signtseeing on practically any day of the year. And, above all, there is not only friendliness and hospitality, but perhaps a greater sense of safety and security than anywhere else in the world.

All of this will give you assurance. If you don't catch the bug and want to stay forever, in a few days you will feel ready to move on.

Whether it be to Norway's North Cape or to Portugal's Algarve, it is easy from Britain. This little island isn't so tight that it can't unlock many doors.

From London or Gatwick airports there are hundreds of flights a week to any European city you care to name. The British Railways have a new sea link system which allows you to travel by rail in Britain, use ferries to the Continent, and tie in with European railways. There are Hovercraft across the English Channel. Air ferries will fly your car to France. Cruise boats start from east coast ports.

But first linger a while in Britain.

If you stay only in London, or one of the other major cities, there are hotels of the Hilton class costing $35 a day, plenty like Brown's in London and the Piccadilly in Manchester at half that price for a single. There are hundreds more where you will get bed and breakfast for $7.

If you have a self-drive car stay at a country hotel (or inn) for at least one night.

PUBS INTERESTING

London's pubs are interesting; those in the country are never to be forgotten. But they have a disadvantage; if you drop in — you have to drop out at 10:30 p.m. This doesn't apply if you are staying in one; then as a traveler you can prop up the bar, taking the odd drink, as you swap stories with the owner until you are ready for bed.

I stayed, not long ago, at one of these country hotels, the Compleat Angler at Marlow, the riverside town which inspired Izaak Walton, less than 40 miles west of London.

From my bedroom, I could look out on the lawn where summer teas are served, to the Thames with its idling swans, to the town church spire on the other bank, to a suspension bridge, and — from the dining room — at water tumbling over a weir.

If you expect drafty corridors and watery cabbage in a hotel like this, you don't know your modern England. It may have been built in the 1700s, but each room is centrally heated, the cuisine matches the best Parisian restaurants, and the whole atmosphere is one of spotlessly clean, silent, friendly relaxation. A double starts at $11.

There are many other areas in which Britain excels apart from pubs, food, friendliness, history and scenery.

Sports, for player or spectator, are as varied as the flowers. I stood for 60 cents to watch an English soccer Cup tie, along with 56,000 other people. It wasn't cold enough to wear a topcoat. That day, I could instead have seen steeplechasing or rugby. The night before I could have gone bowling (ten pins is very popular in Britain) or attended a boxing match. After the soccer game, I could have gone on to greyhound racing.

In March, there is the Oxford and Cambridge boat race; in April the first major horse races 'on the flat.' The Epsom and Ascot races go off in June; in May, cricket gets under way; in July, the world's top tennis players and rowers battle it out at Wimbledon and Henley respectively; in August, there is yachting at Cowes; in almost any month there is a major golf tournament.

THEATRE TOO

If, by September, there is a slight falling off in sporting activity, the theatre is on the upswing. And London theatre, in recent years, has been so successful that it has become a national export to North America, like whisky.

Even if you can't see Hair, which has already been running for 16 months, and for which tickets are still hard to get, there are another 41 theatres in central London with tickets costing from 60 cents to $5.

With prices like these, you may never get to the Continent.

16th Century Yours For Just a Nickel

By JOHN VIRTUE

RECIFE, Brazil (UPI) — Take a five-cent, 30-minute bus ride from this northeastern Brazilian metropolis and you're back in the 17th or 16th century.

Your destination is Olinda, once the largest and most important city in Brazil. Now it's a bedroom satellite of Recife, housing 200,000 persons, most of them poor.

Olinda is the only city of its size in Brazil that doesn't have at least one skyscraper.

There has, in fact, been no new building in Olinda for decades. Many of the structures date from the 18th, 17th and even 16th century.

Except for the blare of radios and television sets and the passing of the occasional car the city itself could have stood still in time.

Olinda was founded and named in 1535 by a Portuguese called Duarte Coelho, who looked at the rolling hill jutting out into the Atlantic and exclaimed, "O linda posicao para uma vila!" That is, "Oh, what a nice spot for a village!"

But the city was vulnerable to attack.

The French invaded Olinda in 1561 and British buccaneer James Lancaster sacked it in 1595. Then the Dutch came along in 1630 and burned it.

Maurice of Nassau, the future prince of Orange, took up residence there in 1637 during the long Dutch occupation of northeastern Brazil.

Now the city's favorite son is Dom Helder Camara, the Archbishop of Olinda and Recife and the leading spokesman for the liberal wing of the Roman Catholic Church in Latin America. One of Dom Heder's gestures was to give away one of the church residences in Olinda for use as an art school.

Besides being home for some of the poorest laborers, Olinda is becoming a centre for artists drawn by the cheap rents and picturesque scenes. Art works instead of Africans are now sold in the city's old slave market.

Slump Reflects Recession

Miami Feeling Pinch

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP)—Tourists—and their dollars—were noticeably absent from this Florida Gold Coast resort in January. Why?

Ed Dean, executive director of the Southern Florida Hotel and Motel Association, insists the slump reflected a "mild recession" in the United States "and our industry is the first to feel it."

Other observers advance reasons ranging from the attraction of legalized gambling in the nearby Bahamas; improved air travel facilities to, from, and within Europe and the Caribbean, and the switch in the site of pro football's Super Bowl from Miami to New Orleans.

Whatever the causes January was a dismal month, although Dean insists the slump is only temporary and takes immediate and vociferous exception to reports that northern tourists no longer come to Miami Beach.

During the month, receipts from hotels, motels, horse races, nightclubs and restaurants were down considerably, even for a period of relative inactivity on the beach.

Elliott Roosevelt, son of the late president and head of Miami Beach's Tourist Development Authority, blamed the lack of tourists on two things: that January always is a slow month and that the Super Bowl was switched from Miami to New Orleans this year.

Roosevelt and Dean both insist the tourists will be back and that business will be booming the rest of the winter.

Scleroderma Domesticus On Rampage

ROME (UPI) — Bad news for finance ministry employees — the scleroderma domesticus is back. It's an ant-like bug one-eighth of an inch long and it feeds on paper.

When hordes of scleroderma first appeared at the finance ministry two years ago they damaged thousands of official papers and the whole building had to be disinfected.

New Liner For Norway

OSLO (UPI) — A new 25,000-ton cruise liner has been ordered by the Norwegian America Line from a shipbuilding firm in Newcastle, England.

The liner, which it is estimated with cost $31,000,000, will be a sister ship to the company's flagship Sagafjord. It will be delivered in 1972.

French 'Antique'

Postcard Port Gigantic Fake

By NINO LO BELLO

PORT GRIMAUD, France — It's all a gigantic fake — the phoney fishermen's cottages, the make-believe medieval frontage and the ersatz terracotta roofs. You get a creepy feeling as you approach Port Grimaud on the Mediterranean coast (a bikini's throw from St. Tropez) because you know the town is just a facade, completely made out of cardboard so that camera-bugs can photograph it.

The man who conceived this utterly preposterous idea of erecting "a picture postcard village" where none of the buildings are real has even gone to the extent of paying women to hang out lines of washing, native-style. Anything to add to the contrived local color and to delight the lens of your visiting Leica. That's Port Grimaud, the most bogus town in all the universe.

But this is precisely its charm. Thirty-six months ago it did not exist. The marsh on which it was built had been up for sale for years; nobody wanted the useless tract of land with no character to it — even though it stood geographically equidistant between famed St. Tropez and posh Ste. Maxime.

Seen from afar, Port Grimaud looks like another old port. You could never tell the difference, unless you took note that the front of the houses are all suspiciously clean. But with the various motorboats and sailboats moored in the harbor, you walk towards the bluff burg and don't notice such things. Besides, your camera is champing at the bit now!

To help you to put a hocus-focus on the most magnificent hocus-pocus in Europe, there is a little electric gondola which creeps slow-motion along the main canal. The canal and the "buildings" that present themselves are a hybrid mixture of Venice and an old Mediterranean fishing port — but a bonafide fisherman you'll ne'er find. So who cares?

The brains behind this very-odd-place-indeed is an architect from Mulhouse, one Francois Spoerry who got the idea one day from a little model he saw in Zurich. He decided to create the same setup but on a larger scale. One thing that possessed him, however, was his determination that every house front would have its own boat outside.

Meanwhile, Spoerry has begun to build real homes and real buildings in back of the cardboard facade. Already some 900 structures have gone up, and they are now occupied by actual people. The work on this housing-for-real project will go on for at least another seven years, at the end of which Port Grimaud (the real town behind the facade town) will have a population of 10,000. Spoerry is selling homes at around $5,000.

Port Grimaud is very much a one-man affair. Ruling with an iron hand and a leather thumb, Spoerry forces the present shopkeepers (whose stores were all built in advance of the rest of the town) to stay open til 10 every night with all the lights lit. With the pioneer crop of inhabitants being strictly regulated as to the amount of noise they can make after dark, Spoerry takes the attitude that if anybody doesn't like his system, they can get out. So far no one has. And the waiting list to buy a Port Grimaud home or apartment gets bigger and bigger.

As far as the postcard side of the establishment is concerned, Spoerry knows that when the world really gets around, the tourist trade will leap. Presently Port Grimaud draws a casual, half-day curiosity crowd from St. Tropez ("Even Bardot came down to look us over one day!"), and this is about the size of its peekaboo traffic.

For his efforts, Spoerry has not been without his share of enemies, nevertheless. Some 2,000 infuriated members of the League Urbaine et Rurale are dead set against the "instant antique," which they have dubbed, "Spoerry's toy for the eye." They charge him with building an outright deception, which he candidly admits he has done. They charge him with being a phoney, which he candidly admits he is.

So there is no debate — but the debate goes on. For Port Grimaud has become exactly what its builder intended it to be — a show-place tourist attraction with the accent on the negative.

Port Grimaud: facade for the eye

Snowy, Bald Wader Topsy-Turvey

FLAMINGO, Fla. (UPI) — In the strange and topsy-turvy world of Everglades National Park, bird watchers are sometimes startled to see wood ibises turn over and glide short distances upside down.

Only member of the stork family in North America, this large wading bird with snowy white body plumage, bare head, and stilt-like legs can be seen in the Flamingo visitor complex on Florida Bay.

Old Cannon Guards Past

VOLCANA, Calif. (UPI) — This town in the mother lode country of the Sierra Nevada once was a roaring gold rush camp which boasted 17 hotels, 35 saloons and three breweries. It also was the site of the first little theatre group in California.

Its most popular tourist attraction today is Big Abe, a civil war cannon smuggled into town to keep some rebels from taking over the gold fields.

Frankfurt Starts Express

NEW YORK (UPI) — Construction has begun on a new rapid transit system to provide a express train link between city and airport in Frankfurt, Germany, reports Lufthansa German Airlines.

Tips from World Traveller

By STAN DELAPLANE

BORA BORA — It's an hour by slow, thunderous DC-4 from Tahiti to the Islands Under-The-Wind. You land on an old Second World War bomber strip, alongside the lagoon. The Tahitian stewardess opened the door to the warm tropical air.

We stood on the strip. And after a few minutes, she came down the steps. In the briefest bikini and a white tiare Tahiti flower behind her ear. Some airline!

The islands have been fairly dry this winter season. (I was in Western Samoa one time when we got 15 inches of rain a day. Three days running!)

Bora Bora is always the most beautiful island of the South Seas. A turquoise lagoon. A shoreline of bending coco palms. Jagged grey green peaks topped with clouds. The great blue Pacific hammers in long rhythmic beat on the living reef.

Hotel Noa Noa is a new Club Mediterranee venture here and the best package price to the South Pacific. About half the guests are middle class French, with the usual resentment of the other half who are Americans.

Management excellent and friendly. Picnics by outrigger to the small snow-white sand islands of the lagoon. Fresh caught bonita is cooked over the coals of a driftwood fire. There's fresh coconut milk from the shell. And endless French table wine. Book Club Mediterranee vacations through American Express.

Friend of mine checking in from France says: "Spent a night on the Isle de Levant off the French coast. A kind of nature colony. Part of the island is semi-nude — aging gay boys wearing a mini handkerchief bikini, and brassy females bellying up to the hotel bar in a sarong slung to the pistol belt line.

"The other half of the island is for the straight birthday suit crowd. Lot of good looking girls dedicated to nudism in the highest sense. One or two rather expensive hotels. I paid $30 for a room at the Hotel La Reserve. But it included all I could eat and liquor thrown in."

He says: "On the way I went to the Monte Carlo Casino and I'd say Rainier is really letting the place go to pot in an effort to lure the gambling gringos. When I was there five years ago it had a lot of class. You paid a few francs extra to enter the Salons Prive and it was pretty exclusive and elegant.

"Now it's full of slobs. And the air of elegance (which isn't hard to take once in a while) has vanished."

Friend postcards from Calcutta: "Lots of the bearded crowd are making it on the cheap around India, Nepal, etc. Nearly all of them pack in the rucksack a book called Golden Guide to South and East Asia. Apparently the absolute scam on making your way on peanuts. Published in Melbourne by Paul Flesch."

Reader writes: "We took your advice and got a houseboat cruiser on The Thames. The first day was pretty wild going through the locks every half hour. But the lock keepers seem used to amateurs and helped us, and we returned veteran salts — if you can say that about fresh water crusing. A great trip."

The Thames in summer cost me $150 for a boat sleeping six. We cooked aboard. The groceries and drinks for five cost be $48 for the week.

"Do you know of any condominium-type housing in Jamaica where the owners rent to visitors?"

Don't know exactly about the condominium set up. But there's a thing called Jamaica Villa-Car Holiday — a combination of house rental plus rent car. (You need a car on the island.) Brochure from World Wide Living, 6290 Sunset Boulevard, Los Angeles.

Mostly I'm against renting houses long distance but this looks reliable. Pictures and complete description. They also have Mexico house rentals.

"How can we get a beach house for the summer in Hawaii?"

Best is a month's subscription to the Honolulu Advertiser and look in the classified ads under Vacation Rentals. Now the good houses on Oahu Island (Honolulu) are priced way up. Like $1,500 a month. Might do better on the Outer Islands. I checked local weekly papers and found houses at $250 to $300.

Bank Theft

$5,000 Bail Set

A 25-year-old man appeared in Victoria Provincial Court Saturday, charged in connection with the holdup of a downtown Victoria bank Friday afternoon.

John Alan King, 25, who police say recently arrived in Victoria from Calgary, was remanded for election and plea until Friday on a charge of robbery threatening violence.

Judge J. A. Byers set bail at $5,000 cash.

MAN FLED

The charge arose from an incident shortly after 3 p.m. Friday at the Yates and Broad Streets branch of the Toronto-Dominion Bank where a man fled with about $1,100 after handing a note to bank teller Gv[illegible]merson demanding she hand over the money.

King was arrested later at Fisgard and Store.

Police say Friday's robbery was not connected with another holdup Wednesday afternoon at the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce at Fort and Cook.

In that incident, a man made off with $2,100 after handing the teller a threatening note.

Scouts at Camp

Bacon's Sizzling At Beacon Hill

Victoria's usually tranquil and serene Beacon Hill Park echoed to the noisy hustle and bustle of some 300 youngsters Saturday morning.

Mixing with the scent of the first spring flowers and fresh grass was the unmistakable fragrance of sizzling bacon and freshly-brewed coffee.

A day's activities had begun for the Fort Victoria District Boy Scouts who had set up camp under the stately trees of the park the night before.

MANY TENTS

Scattered about were little green, yellow, blue and orange tents. A number of larger tents had been set up to hold the food supplies.

"This is our Diamond Jubilee," said District Commissioner Egon Mikkelsen.

"Sixty years ago, the first Fort Victoria Boy Scout group was formed and we wanted to mark that lay with a special celebration."

The idea of setting up camp in Beacon Hill Park, he said, was to promote the Boy Scout image.

STILL HERE

"We want to show people that we're still here that the Scout movement still have something to offer the adventurous youth," he said.

"With us they find true adventure. They are given a challenge. They don't have to hang around street corners."

The district commissioner said youngsters today were no different from those 20 years ago.

"The rougher it is, the better they like it."

The jamboree ends at 4 p.m. today.

MR. GLENN SMITH

Mr. D. Lawson, President, Empress Pontiac Buick Ltd., announces the retirement of Mr. Smith after 45 successful years of selling GM products to many Victorian's.

The management and staff take this opportunity to extend their hearty wishes for long life, health and happiness to Glenn. He may look back on an enviable record of selling Pontiacs, Buicks and Vauxhalls to his many satisfied customers in past years, and forward to quieter times in the pursuit of his hobbies and recreation.

Blue Water

Racer Nearing Completion

By HENRY FREW

One of the largest ocean racers to be built for a number of years on Vancouver Island is currently under construction at Maple Bay Marina and Shipyard.

She is a Sparkman and Stephen designed 44-footer with a waterline length of 30 feet. She has an 11 foot three inch beam and a draft of six feet 8½ inches.

The three brothers, Leif, Arne and John Bentzen, who are building the racer for Fred Davies of Vancouver, took over the marina in Birdseye Cove in 1960. They brought with them from Denmark a passion for building quality wooden sailboats that is getting work for them from all over the west coast of the continent.

It is hoped the boat will be ready for launching in May with most of the problems already solved. One of the main difficulties to start with was to find someone willing to cast the lead keel.

This keel weighs 11,040 pounds compared with the average keel cast on the island of around 3,500 pounds. Eventually a Victoria firm, Vancouver Island Brass, agreed to take on the task. The main problem was the positioning of the bolts in the keel, but co-operation between the foundary and Benzens overcame this.

The design of the boat is basically on the design of the well-known ocean racer Blackjack. With 11,040 pounds of ballast in the keel and a total displacement of 22,400 pounds, she will have a ballast displacement ratio of approximately 50 per cent.

Stem, keel and frames are all laminated oak with the hull planking in solid mahogany. The cabin top and deck will be planked in teak, and the inside finish will be in mahogany.

Hull planks are all scarf-jointed and sealed with rubber seam compound. This rubber compound used in seams should mean that the seams should never need caulking. All woodwork fastenings are in bronze, and the rigging will be in stainless steel.

She will be fitted with a Volvo Penta MD 21 marine diesel engine as an auxiliary to her sail area of 725 square feet. The present accommodation plan calls for seven bunks and a small low cabin top. The helmsman's position is right back in the stern and the foredeck is relatively free of hatches and obstructions to quick and easy sail handling.

Winner of the Royal Victoria Yacht Club's five mile race at Tsehum Haven last Sunday was Upepo. This 31-foot sloop belonging to Peter White managed to hold off J. D. Smith in the 49-foot sloop Reality. In third position was the 30-footer Encore owned by W. A. Stenner.

The Royal Victoria Club is sponsoring a winter fun race in the Sidney area on March 8. This event is open to any keelboat whether the owner is a member of an organized yacht club or not.

The start will be at 10:45 a.m. and the start line will be between Sidney and Roberts Point. The course will cover a distance of 10 miles, and start and finish lines will be the same. There will be an informal get-together after the race at the Latch.

The fifth panel in the series Better Racing will be held in the Royal Victoria clubhouse at 8 p.m. Thursday. The topic will be Tactics and Team Racing. Questions and problems on such points as how to ensure room at the mark and how to cover a dangerous opponent will be answered.

The West Vancouver Yacht Club has scheduled its annual Women's Sailing Championships for the weekend of June 13-14. This regatta is open to all women sailors 21 or over who are members of a CYA-affiliated yacht club.

Racing will be in Flying Juniors and should prove keen and competitive. The trophy for the overall winner is the Silver-Sails Championship Trophy. It was won last year by West Van Yacht Club's Lynn Cove.

Labor Views Inflationary Ills

Wages Must Follow Trail of Prices—Up

By DON COLLINS

That comet hurtling through the atmosphere of today's complicated economy represents prices.

Like all comets, it has a tail. In this case the tail represents wages.

Wherever prices go, wages will surely follow.

This, at least, is how organized labor — nationally and in Victoria — views the country's inflationary ills.

It is also one of the reasons labor is opposed to wage restraints.

Although business has given a nod of approval to the principle of restraints, labor has its doubts and wants to see some proof that profits can be held down on a massive basis.

There are also other reasons for opposition.

In Ottawa this week, the Canadian Labor Congress went on record as saying it has no authority to make any commitments binding unions to restraints.

Joe Morris, CLC executive vice-president, said proposals for wages and working conditions are made by the workers themselves at local union meetings and are negotiated separately with thousands of employers throughout Canada.

The democratic structure of the CLC does not permit it to dictate wage demands to unions, he said.

"Any recommendation from above would therefore have no binding effect on the individual unions and locals, just as promises coming from organizations such as the Canadian Manufacturers' Association or the Canadian Chamber of Commerce can have no binding effect on their individual members," Mr. Morris said.

Victoria Labor Council President Jack Groves said Saturday night the same rule applies at the labor council level.

"We can't tell our affiliates (72 affiliated unions) what to do," he said. "They can ask us for advice and we can try to give it, but that's as far as it goes."

He said he felt it would be impossible for unions to commit themselves to restraints now because of the continuing rise in prices and profits of companies.

"No matter what unions you want to pick today, you will find its wage structure has fallen well behind since it signed its last agreement. And that goes even if the agreement was signed only six months ago."

E. T. Staley of Victoria, who is president of the 140,000-member B.C. Federation of Labor, feels there are many factors that have a more serious effect on inflation than do wages.

Extremely high interest rates, a market that has produced "unwarranted price increases," and a taxation system that he sees as extreme, head his list.

He thinks increasing taxes from all levels of government have had much to do with some of the bigger wage demands.

Mr. Groves also agrees that taxes enter the picture in a big way and is critical of the groundswell of opposition to the Benson white paper on tax reform.

While labor has taken no official stand yet on the white paper, Mr. Groves and other unionists feel it offers relief to the little men.

"The complaint seems to be that a lot of small businesses would be endangered. Well, if they are being run so inefficiently in the first place, maybe they should be allowed to fail," he said.

"Why should we subsidize inefficient industry? This is what they are asking us to do."

In his statement in Ottawa, Mr. Morris said the CLC is "very concerned with the increase in the rate of unemployment that we are already experiencing, now, and with the fact that any rash policies against inflation would inevitably worsen the situation."

He said wages have always lagged behind prices and suggested that any effective price restraints would be reflected in future wage proposals by unions.

Hydro

UBCM Urges Study

"Distorted publicity" given a UBC computer study of the future of the Gulf Islands last fall was an obstacle to the program's main aims, its director said Friday in Victoria.

"The problem was that the study got too much publicity, and distorted publicity," Dr. C. S. Holling told about 90 persons at the University of Victoria..

"Because of this it came to a confrontation between the engineers and Dan Campbell and that was not my purpose."

The November study said that if past and present land development trends do not diminish, 80 per cent of all first-class recreational land in the Gulf Islands will be intensively developed by 1980.

Municipal Affairs Minister Dan Campbell criticized the report shortly after it was publicized, saying that his decision to impose restrictions on land development in the islands would upset the computer's findings.

Dr. Holling, who directs the UBC Institute of Resource Ecology, said initial work had been aimed at developing the "model" with which the problem could be attacked and that it was hoped future studies would include data from persons involved in formulating government policy.

"Now we are going to move on the next step which involves government policy makers," he said.

Norway Tests Fitness

Queen's Own Joins NATO Show

By DON GAIN

The First Battalion, Queen's Own Rifles of Canada, will begin a seven day airlift Monday morning that will take them from Patricia Bay airport to northern Norway.

More than 600 officers and men, with 80 of the battalion's vehicles, will take part in the NATO exercise Arctic Express with troops from the U.K., U.S., Norway, Italy and Western Germany.

"You could call it a show of NATO unity in northern Europe," the battalion's commanding officer, Lt-Col. Thorold Marsaw, said Saturday.

The exercise will test the troops' capability in rugged country under winter conditions.

The Work Point battalion took part in an exercise on the Alaska Highway near Fort St. John in December, and some of the men took ski training in the Kananaskis area near Banff recently.

The three-week Norwegian exercise has several purposes, the colonel said.

"The airlift is part of it," he said. "We will show how fast we can get to a trouble spot and be ready for action as soon as we get there."

As part of Mobile Command, it is the battalion's role to "get there in good order, ready to fight," the colonel said.

"The first men who arrive will spill off the aircraft, get their vehicles together and take off. The exercise shows any would-be aggressor that we're there, the rest of us are coming and we're serious."

In addition to personnel carriers and trucks, the battalion will also take power sleds, snowshoes and skis. Helicopters from 403 Squadron, Ottawa, will be used in the exercise.

Men from Work Point will compete in a skiing and shooting competition with the other NATO nations while there.

Other Canadian troops and vehicles will be flown over from Calgary, Winnipeg and Ottawa by Air Transport Command Yukon and Hercules aircraft.

Land, sea and air units from the various countries will take part in a simulated invasion and defence of Norway, similar to the exercise the Queens' Own took part in a year ago last summer.

At that time the winter snows had almost melted and there were 24 hours of daylight. There are six hours of daylight at this time of year and plenty of snow.

That's why the men from Work Point are taking white camouflage suits with them. And that's why they painted camouflage patterns on their personnel carriers last week.

Because there are a lot of trees in northern Norway there's a pattern of light and shadow. The vehicles were painted to match.

The men from Esquimalt will be bunking outside for the next few weeks. That's part of the exercise.

They'll land at Barduross. Their headquarters will be at Olsborg and their operations will take place around Narvik, where two naval battles were fought 30 years ago this April between the Allies and the Germans.

The Work Point battalion is assigned to the allied northern force of NATO on a standby basis.

Commodore R. V. Henning, commander of CFB Esquimalt, whose staff has provided assistance in exercise planning and administration, will see Lt.-Col. Marsaw off at 9:30 a.m. Tuesday from Patricia Bay Airport.

The battalion will return between March 9 and 13.

Seaman Ill At Sea

The American freighter Columbia Hawk has turned back from 900 miles off Vancouver Island toward Tofino to evacuate a seaman apparently stricken with appendicitis, the coast guard reported Saturday.

The coast guard said the ill crewman, Victor Wirth, will be airlifted to the nearest U.S. hospital by a coast guard helicopter from Port Angeles, Wash., as soon as the Columbia Hawk is within 150 miles of land.

The rendezvous is expected about noon today. The coast guard said it did not have Wirth's age or hometown.

City Woman Injured In Collision

A Victoria woman was in serious condition early Sunday morning in Chemainus General Hospital following a three-car collision on the Trans-Canada Highway Saturday night that sent five persons to hospital.

The others — a Victoria man, a Duncan man and a Crofton mother and child — were in fairly good condition at the same hospital.

Three other persons, including two Chemainus men and another Victoria man, were uninjured in the crash that occurred shortly before 7 p.m. at the River Road turnoff near Chemainus.

All names were withheld.

Library Hope Increases For Schools

By NANCY BROWN

There are signs that the provincial government may soon declare libraries essential in schools, Greater Victoria school board trustee Peter Bunn said Saturday.

"Right now many of our schools have books and various materials but they are kept in glorified cupboards or converted health rooms," said Mr. Bunn, who is chairman of the buildings and grounds committee.

"If the government does decide that libraries are essential if we are to carry out the curriculum laid down by the education department, it may mean that we can get on towards completion of the program we started with our $13,187,450 referendum in May, 1967."

He said the school board has been asking the provincial government to release funds for school construction.

"So far we've been able to spend only half of the money voted to us," he said. "Some we got through before the freeze and the other during the election campign when we decided the political climate was such that the freeze would be lifted temporarily.

"Other money will only be released if the political climate is right, so it is up to concerned parents to back up their school boards in asking for building and pointing up problems."

Mr. Bunn said that while libraries are needed in several elementary schools, as far as the school board is concerned additions to some junior high schools have highest priority.

"We are having some success in keeping youngsters in the junior high schools if there is plenty of shop equipment for a good vocational program," said Mr. Bunn.

"We have over 81 per cent retention at this time—fewer and fewer youngsters are opting out.

"The department seems to agree that shop facilities should have high priority."

Additions, improvements and rebuilding are slated for 12 elementary schools, with top priority for Victoria West and Monterey, said school board chairman Dr. Carron Jameson.

"I think it must be intolerable for parents and students in some of these schools where the conditions are just dreadful," said Dr. Jameson.

"Apparently the education department and the treasury board look with horror on the idea of a classroom that isn't jam-packed with students all day and every day," he said.

Dr. Jameson emphasized that only 50 per cent of the money set aside in the referendum had been spent in the past three years.

"We had planned to have the whole program completed by now," he said, "And it's certainly not our fault that it hasn't been.

"We have leaned on the department at all times, and have put on the pressure."

He said the board will manage to have enough classroom space in the fall for all children, but much of it will be overcrowded, and many schools will lack such things as auditoriums and libraries.

"We feel that to cary out the school curriculum and to give a well rounded education the students should have the resource of a library and the room for an auditorium.

"Can you imagine a school for 650 students or so and no space at all for music, dancing, physical education or assembly?" he asked.

"Apparently the provincial government thinks it's all right."

He said more space is a crying need, so that teachers can give individual students proper attention.

"We can manage without small classes if there is room for the teacher to divide students up into groups that can work alone and those that need constant supervision," he said.

Dr. Jameson said the school board is considering another referendum primarily for land purchase.

"We need more land for school additions, and we shall need a new school in the centre of the school district," he said.

"We should start looking for the land we are going to need before land costs go any higher."

Saanich Senior Citizens' Units Set by Fall?

Saanich Ald. Edith Gunning hopes the Saanich senior citizens' residence at Hampton and Seaton will be ready for occupancy this fall.

Low bidder for the two-storey building is Dawson Developments at $633,785. Allied Devlopments bid $665,718 and G. H. Wheaton, $669,114.

The three contractors

earlier submitted bids ranging from $518,057 to $653,139 but they were rejected because of design.

Ald. Mrs. Gunning, chairman of Saanich lands and housing committee, said the technical committee, which has representatives of three levels of government, will meet within 10 days to consider the proposals, choose one and make a recommendation.

"I'm very hopeful that things will move along quickly and that the project may be ready for occupancy by the fall," she said.

The new proposals all call for 81 units. There are to be 16 one-bedroom units and 65 bachelor units.

Each unit will have either a separate courtyard or, on the second floor, a separate balcony. There will be washers and dryers and storage rooms on each floor.

Ald. Mrs. Gunning said a pleasing feature of the plan is that the kitchen-dining area is separated from the living-sleeping area even in the bachelor suites.

There will be a social room on each floor and a games room for both floors.

Capital cost of the project started by Saanich more than three years ago, will be financed by the federal and provincial governments.

ERMA BOMBECK: TROUBLEMAKER

Fur Heaven's Sake

"Hello," I said to the sales person. "I should like to purchase a winter dress with sleeves."

She looked up from her order book. "I beg your pardon."

I said I should like to buy a winter dress with sleeves.

She scrutinized me closely. "Aren't you the nut who was in here last August trying to buy a bathing suit?"

"Yes."

"I thought so. You're not going to make trouble again, are you?"

"Not if you have a winter dress with sleeves."

"Look," she sighed, "the department store schedule of merchandise is quite simple. Why don't you take one of our calendar of events. That way you won't be running in here in the dead of winter trying to buy a winter dress."

DEPARTMENT STORE CALENDAR OF EVENTS

January: Christmas cards. Buy now. Avoid disappointment.

February: Just in! Rotisserie and outdoor barbeque grills.

March: Once a year shipment of bathing caps. Come early.

April: Back to school harvest. Save.

May: Stock up now on blankets.

June: For special customers. Mittens sold one day only between 3 and 5 p.m.

July: Giant fur sale.

August: Graduation pictures half price.

September: Cruise-into-Spring fashions.

October: We're overstocked. Savings on 10,000 pairs of barefoot sandals.

November: Campers' bonanza. Lamps, coolers, tents. Easy to store if you own your own warehouse.

December: Millinery savings on spring straws, feather silks and little-nothing turbans.

"Any questions?" she asked with a grin.

"Where is the winter dress with sleeves in it sold?"

"Somewhere between stock up on blankets and mittens sold one day only between 3 and 5 p.m."

"And what about bathing suits?"

"They are sold only during the months when the snowbirds are mating."

"Then I'm afraid I'm too late."

"I'm afraid so," she said. "But how about a bathing cap? You know how miserable they are to find when they're in season. We order three a year and when they're gone . . . they're gone."

"I'll take the one with the ridges and the daisies."

"Fine, shall we send it out?"

"No. I'm going to wear it."

"They may have my job for this," she grimaced, "but did anyone ever tell you you're weird!"

Hawaii Nearer Easy Abortion

HONOLULU (UPI) — A bill which would make Hawaii the most liberal U.S. abortion state is only a step from becoming law, with the final legislative hurdle Tuesday morning.

The state House of Representatives voted 31-20 Friday to repeal Hawaii's century-old abortion law. The Senate was scheduled to vote Tuesday on the bill and is expected to approve it by a wide margin.

Gov. John Burns, a Roman Catholic, has indicated he will not veto the bill, which would strike down a statute which allows abortion only to save the womans life.

The bill would legalize abortions performed by a licensed physician in a state-licensed hospital on women requesting the operations who have been Hawaii residents at least three months.

The bill had passed the Senate earlier but the House sent it to a joint conference committee which added several "safeguards," including the residency requirement.

Death Spurs Riddle

ERIE, Pa. (UPI) — The second wife of a wealthy Tennessee physician whose death disclosed he maintained families in two states Saturday was given custody of her husband's body for funeral services but not for burial.

Erie County Judge James Dwyer said burial arrangements would be determined Monday after Dr. Darrell Shipley's will and legal papers are received and reviewed in Erie.

Shipley, 38, was killed last Thursday when his twin-engine Piper Aztec airplane crashed in a creek about 15 miles west of here.

The decision came after an hour-long hearing at which attorneys for Mrs. Bobbie Sue Shipley of Clarksville, Tenn., and Mrs. Joanne Shipley of Erie, wrangled with questions of reported marriages, divorces, remarriages and annulments.

Judge Dwyer determined Shipley had wed Bobbie Sue in Tennessee in 1955 and had also married Joanne Coles in Erie in 1963. The marriage to Joanne was annulled subsequently when it was learned he was not divorced.

In January of 1964, Shipley obtained a divorce from Bobbie Sue and later that year was granted an annulment from her for reasons unknown. The following November, he remarried Joanne.

It was learned Saturday two children of the Erie woman by a previous marriage were later adopted by Shipley.

Mrs. Bobbie Sue Shipley has four children ranging in ages from 3 to 11 in Clarksville.

Erie county coroner Merle Wood had asked the court to determine the legal surviving spouse.

Shipley's estate, estimated at $500,000, includes seven cars, a houseboat and property in both states.

Montgomery County (Tenn.) circuit Judge William Beach deferred action Friday on probating a will left by Shipley pending the outcome of court action in Erie.

Attorney Dempsey Mark, representing Joanne, told Beach, "We have evidence that Dr. Shipley signed legal documents in Pennsylvania that stated he was a resident of Pennsylvania in recent months."

Shipley, the Montgomery County medical examiner and coroner since 1961, was en route to Erie when the plane crashed. The federal aviation agency in Nashville, Tenn., said he filed a flight plan for Erie at least once a month.

Vigil Protests Boston Jailing

BOSTON (UPI) — Scores of persons conducted a candlelight vigil outside the Charles Street jail Friday in protest against laws that sent birth control crusader William Baird to the prison for three months.

Baird began serving the sentence after being convicted of illegally dispensing a birth control device to an unmarried woman two years ago.

At the same time, four Boston clergymen and a prominent city lawyer petitioned Gov. Francis Sargent to pardon Baird, the father of four.

"We and millions of others are devastated by the disregard for the needs of the people of this century and the next which this sentence shows, for an act done out of regard for them," the petition said.

It said that the results of overpopulation are "to be far more feared than indiscretion in the use of devices and matters available in practically every retail dispenser of remedies in this commonwealth."

The petition criticized the state's law forbidding "crimes against chastity" on the ground "the state has no right to intrude on private affairs, and citizens have the right to determine their own destinies."

It was signed by Rev. Robert Drinan, dean of Boston College law school; Rev. John White of St. Philips Church in Roxbury; Rev. George Sphneola, St. Francis de Salle church in Roxbury; Rev. John Colhan of All Saints in Roxbury, and attorney William Homans Jr.

Baird surrendered to authorities at the jail, accompanied by his wife and about 50 supporters. A parents' aid society van used in disseminating birth control information cruised through the nearby Beacon Hill section draped in black crepe paper in mourning for the jailing.

"You can jail my body but you'll never destroy my fight for the right of all people to birth control help," Baird said on entering the prison.

ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann Landers: I had a date the other night with a girl who has done secretarial work in foreign countries. Pearl is bright and attractive. I liked her very much until she did something that shocked me.

Last night we went to dinner in a chic little cafe. I ordered expensive wine because I wanted to make an impression. When the food arrived, Pearl took a wad of gum out of her mouth and stuck it behind her ear. My jaw must have dropped because she asked, "What's the matter?"

I told her I was surprised to see her do that. She replied: "It's an old Chinese custom. I learned it in Hong Kong. The most elegant women do it. I prefer it to putting the gum on the wrist, as they do in Japan."

Have you every heard of these customs? I'm flabbergasted. — Chapel Hill, N.C.

Dear Chap: She's putting you on. It's a childish hangup and an indelicate one to say the least. If she does it again, tell her the depression is over and hand her a nickel for a whole new package.

Dear Ann Landers: Here's one for the fellows who responded in praise to Miss Ice Cube — the man who married the girl who said NO.

One must not generalize where females are concerned. Many girls will have an affair or two — before marriage. This doesn't mean they are tramps. Some girls go to bed with every guy who asks — for a variety of reasons. Most of them sick.

Then there are the professional virgins — dames who come so close to having total sex that it makes no sense not to. These hypocrites are a dying breed, I'm happy to say.

It's a well known secret that a girl CAN fake it and a fellow can be fooled. So — unless you marry someone straight from the cradle, boys, chances are that all you got was the crate the fruit came in. — Just Human.

Dear Just: And now in anticipation of the thousands of letters from readers who will ask if there is any sure way to ascertain virginity — the answer is NO. So save your stamps, kiddies.

Dear Ann Landers: We are very friendly with another couple. We have dinner together, play cards, go to movies and sport events as a foursome.

The other gal is up at the crack of dawn. She has her housework done before most people have breakfast. Then she races around all day — doing errands, shopping and visiting. By evening she is worn out. More than once she has fallen asleep in the middle of a card game. We've had to wake her up to take her out of a movie. One night she fell asleep during a baseball game and started to snore.

Please print this letter and wake her up. — Grand Rapids.

Dear Grand: If your friend hasn't had a checkup recently, suggest it. Maybe she has narcolepsy. If the doc says she's in good health, plan earlier evenings. If that fails, your only solution is to substitute this couple with two nocturnals (night people). This gal is definitely diurnal and can't be changed.

'Assign Gender Promptly'

Intersex Cases Growing

By GEORGE GETZE
Colonist Los Angeles Times Service

When a baby is born the first thing everybody, including the obstetrician does is to take a quick glance to see if it's a boy or girl, look at the ears, and count the fingers and toes.

What they ought to do first, according to the professor of radiology at the University of Missouri school of medicine, is to make a close medical examination of the child's sex organs.

"If there's any doubt at all that the child is a boy or girl, an x-ray examination of the internal genital passages should be made that very same day," Dr. Charles Shopfner said in an interview.

Dr. Shopfner said the most important thing with children of indeterminate sex is to make a prompt decision as to the sex in which it will be reared.

"It's the most important decision that will ever affect the child's life, and if the child is to be spared heartbreak and shipwreck, it must be made right after birth," Dr. Shopfner said.

Making the decision and sticking to it is more important than being 100 per cent right, according to Dr. Shopfner.

"If it turns out several years later, for example, that a child has a male chromosomal pattern when it has been brought up as a girl, a normal and perfectly acceptable life as a female can still be led," he said.

"But it is virtually impossible to reverse the sex later on because it is impossible to reverse an individual's concept of his or her own gender," Dr. Shopfner said.

He was here to speak at an alumni convention of the Loma Linda University school of medicine.

He said cases of "intersex," or anomalous sex, are making the condition more prevalent than some congenital heart lesions, deformations of the esophagus and other congenital malformations with which doctors and parents seem more concerned.

According to Dr. Shopfner, some of these children become homosexuals or have other serious emotional and psychological problems.

If the physical problem is handled right, none of these emotional problems need occur, he said.

"First, a sex must be promptly assigned in accordance with the doctor's judgment of the individual's anatomical capabilities," Dr. Shopfner said.

"That is, if the x-rays show the child has a better chance to be a successful woman than a successful man—and that is the more usual situation—the doctors must decide right away that it will be brought up a girl.

"The second important thing is for proper medical follow up of this decision, to do everything medically possible and necessary to support the individual's anatomical capabilities, such as administration of hormones," he said.

Dr. Shopfner said it is necessary to keep the parents from telling their neighbors and relatives that they have had a boy, or a girl, before a final decision about its sex has been made.

"Once a father has proudly handed out cigars to celebrate the birth of a son, it is almost always too late to change the sex and the result will be a lifetime of emotional upset for the 'boy,' he said.

Why, Why, Why? Drives Mom Mad

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Womens' Editor

NEW YORK—"Why?" — the word is one a parent hears persistently, often to the point of distraction, from the small child.

There are two ways to deal with the "why, why, why?". That is part of the daily patter. One is to kiss off the question with "because . . . that's why." Or, wiser, the parent answers or at least tries to answer the question, helping the child to learn and helping in the parent-child relationship.

"Why can't animals talk?" "Why do I have to go to bed?" "Why do I get hungry?" These are just some of the questions covered in a delightful and helpful book by Susanne Kirtland, an ad writer-executive with AC and R Advertising, New York. It's called "Easy Answers to Hard Questions," a guide to the parent stumped by a child's wondering about the world in which he lives.

If the parent doesn't have time to answer, let the child read the book, for the illustrations too are charming, done by Susan Perl, whose drawings for years have accompanied ads for a children's clothing maker, plus many children's books and other works.

Miss Kirtland explores in simple terms the mysteries of rain, waves, rainbows, fear of the dark, toothaches, love, why skin colors differ, and says she gathered her questions from many persons—some with children, others who "just cared about what made kids wonder." In some of the answers, she hides small sermons.

She explains that climate was the original factor in skin colors, but today because of travel there are people of many colors living in all parts of the world "but no matter what color a person's skin is, everyone belongs to the same big family, the family of man."

If the small ones want to know why animals can't talk, tell them animals can, some by action, some by sound. When a bee wants to tell his family where to find food, he dances. Dogs say hello by wagging their tails and barking. Whales, porpoises and dolphins have special underwater language-squeaks, which scientists are beginning to understand.

"Why do I have to go to bed? A parent is supposed to get off the hook on this almost daily inquiry with the answer in part . . . "Your muscles get tired from playing. And your brain gets tired from thinking. A nap or a good night's sleep lets all these important parts of your body rest—so you have the energy to think and play again."

Suicide Recording

'Just Don't Know What Isn't Real'

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A week ago, Craig Gardner, a handsome 19-year-old postal worker, got up early. He went to work for a few hours, visited his mother briefly, then went to his apartment and made a tape recording.

Then he drove from Salt Lake City to a remote area of Wyoming and, the county coroner ruled, shot himself.

The tape recording was found by a roommate and played at Craig's funeral — a rambling, touching account of a young man's struggle with the drug LSD.

His parents released a portion of the tape Saturday, saying it might alert others who use drugs.

"We hope to God it will help somebody else," said his mother, Mrs. William Blain of Salt Lake City.

Here is what her son said in his last hours:

"I can't think . . . can't think . . . can't think.

"Well, about all I have to say is — actually, the real reason is that I really don't know — (pause) I'll tell you one thing, Dave (his roommate) and anyone else who's listening, you can really get messed up on that stuff.

"You might hear about it sooner or later, Mom — I'm sorry, Mom, Dad and Bill — I'm sorry that your little boy has turned into an LSD addict.

"It's bad news — it really is. I didn't think it was when I was first taking it, but I've been getting pretty stoned lately, and you just don't know what's real and what isn't real. You really don't.

"All I can say is, I had to find out myself — kind of a poor excuse, you know — but I really shouldn't have taken any dope at all — and acid (LSD) — and I shouldn't really have started off with any grass.

"I had enough problems of my own without even taking LSD to keep my mind bent. Well, actually what acid does is it intensifies everything to great extent. This probably is what it did to me . . .

"Tell you one thing — after you take so much of that stuff, you don't just really know where you're at sometimes . . .

"I mean, I don't think I am, but what I've heard is that a person who thinks he's insane . . . or something would never admit it to himself . . .

"All I know is I'm going to be in one hell of a fix when I have to face the Big Man up in Heaven. I'm not saying that disrespect for the Big Man. I'm just saying it because I felt like saying it.

"And it says in the Bible that he who kills himself will not be resurrected. Well, this is the great punishment that I'm bestowing upon myself, not only physically, but, for what I've read, I'm going to be suffering eternally for this.

"I have thought it over many times and there really isn't anything to live for. I don't think there is. And I really don't think anyone could convince me that there is — not me, anyway . . ."

Then he drove to Wyoming and killed himself.

London Game: Royal Chuckle

LONDON (UPI) — Londoners who picked up their copies of the Evening Standard Saturday got a royal guffaw—something that in cartoon form is now appearing with greater regularity in these permissive times.

Saturday's cartoon, a regular feature in the Standard by artist Jak, depicts Queen Elizabeth sitting on her sofa, her husband Prince Phillip at her side by the fireplace, admonishing her son Prince Charles on joining the Royal Navy.

"I do hope you don't come out swearing like you father!" the caption reads.

Such visual renditions of life with the Royal Family, which if not forbidden outright until a few years ago, were certainly muted by a gentleman's agreement between Buckingham Palace and British cartoonists.

History recalls how Queen Victoria, not altogether a popular monarch, was the subject of much graphic rebuke. Later George V, her grandson and Queen Elizabeth's grandfather, restored the quiet dignity to the throne with his grand demeanor and popular following, and the cartoonists found other subjects.

Now, some palace observers feel, not only because of man's more informal society, but also because of the Royal Family's own indulgence in wit, the cartoonists find the Queen royal game.

Car Harness Saves Child

TORONTO (CP) — Almost half the deaths of children killed in traffic accidents while passengers in automobiles might have been prevented if the children had been in safe car seats and wearing specially designed harnesses or the cars' seat belts.

George Ham of the Ontario Safety League says tests in the United States suggest that at least 40 per cent of the deaths could have been prevented and the injuries greatly reduced by the use of proper restraining equipment.

He says the ordinary car seat sold for children is worse than useless except for keeping them from climbing around in the car or for preventing a bump in a sudden stop situation.

For older children there are harnesses available that safety league experts consider adequate. They range from $9.95 to $14.95.

A baby up to six months old should travel in a covered padded bassinet on the back seat. The covering should be wrapped right around the bassinet so the baby cannot be thrown out, and the bassinet should be held in place by the back seat lap belt.

"An infant should never be held on his mother's lap in the front seat. Under impact he could be crushed between her and the front panel.

Press Club Ban Spurs Protesters

OTTAWA (CP) — About 60 placard-carrying demonstrators marched in front of a downtown hotel hosting the National Press Club ball Friday night, demanding that women be allowed membership in the club.

The protestors, most of them women, were joined by New Democrats Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre), Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville) and Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).

The press club voted last month to continue its ban on female membership.

Action Beyond the Reef

By following "underwater highway" and getting down deep with the aid of the new Harrison Tripper device, we got eight chinooks, up to better than 20 pounds, and threw several under-five pounders back, on ultra-light tackle last weekend off the southeast tip of Coal Island, near Sidney.

It was a tremendous salmon fishing trip and partners were Rhys Davis, inventor of the Teaser bait holders which catch more fish than any other lure on Vancouver Island, and Bob Harrison, inventor of the little plastic tipper which enabled us to reach the deepwater fish with light gear.

Tricky Fishing

It was tricky fishing . . . in underwater valleys between five underwater reefs that rise as sheer cliffs from the manouevring in a confined area and only five or six feet off course puts you in a position to snag the reef with your tackle, which we did more than once.

This kind of fishing is only possible through an intimate knowledge of the area—Rhys has fished these waters for 30 or 40 years—and the rigid following of a number of set landmarks.

Light Rod

We were able to fish with a light strip casting rod, because of an ingenious two-rod setup Rhys has devised using the Harrison Trippers . . . something similar to the way commercial fishermen fish several lines at various depths, but specially designed for single-lure no-weight light-rod fishing by sportsmen.

He puts a 3½ pound (or any other weight) lead ball (cement block, rock or cast iron would be quite suitable) over the side on a heavier rod.

Chain Swivel

Three or four feet from the heavy weight he has a chain swivel. Attached to the chain swivel he runs 10 or 12 feet of line from another swivel attached to the centre of the chain swivel, making a three-way-type swivel. At the end of that line he attaches the solid part of the plastic Harrison Tripper.

The light rod and light line go in the centre rod holder and Rhys threads the other plunger part of the Harrison Tripper on that line. He bais the line, and this time we were using large strip on an improved bait holder Rhys will soon place on the market.

Bob Harrison, left, and Rhys Davis, with first two of eight winter chinooks in Sidney's Coal Island waters.—(Alec Merriman.)

Then he let the line out about 30 pulls or 45 feet and attached the line with the Tripper to the other part of the Tripper, on the line with the weight. When a fish strikes it would pull out the Tripper and the line would be weight-free to play the fish.

Rhys uses a one-ounce weight on the baited line, just to stop it from twisting.

Then he lets out the rod with only the weight on it (no lure or bait) simultaneously with the baited line for another 60 pulls, or 90 feet, for a total of 135 feet in those waters.

With that hookup you are using two rods, but only one is fishing. The other is simply to hold the weight. When the fish strikes you have the fish on the lightest possible tackle. As a matter of fact with that setup you could even fish with a fly rod. There is absolutely no strain on the rod until a fish hits. When it does hit, oh boy! That is the maximum thrill of fishing!

Bob Harrison didn't use the light-rod setup, but fished a concrete ball trip weight, threaded on a coat hanger in two halves. He makes his own weights by the score; using plastic balls cut in half as moulds and places a nail through the wet cement to leave a hole when it sets. That way he can afford to lose lots of weights.

Pocket Money

As a matter of fact his youngsters have built up quite a little pocket-money business moulding the cement weights.

Bob used a special blown-up Super Teaser fished with the smallest minnow obtainable. With that rig he didn't have to put the hook in the tail of the minow. He gets the necessary spin without and just lets the hook hang at the tail.

Bob loses the weight when a fish strikes and trips it, but Rhys doesn't lose his weight with the double-rod trip setup. He can afford to use lead balls which give maximum depth. Bob uses weights he can afford to lose.

"The sea-bottom is like streets, with side roads and arterials . . . underwater highways . . . but the only signs you have are on land," explains Rhys.

We pulled out in the early morning from Canoe Cove and speeded out in Rhys' Bertram the short distance around the southeast corner of Coal Island.

First Mark

Rhys knew where he was going. We stopped off the green pasture on Coal Island and looked for a little road clearing on the beach. We lined that up with a maple tree and pole in the pasture and we were ready to fish from the first "mark." Straight out and then head for the Shag Rock, with the cormorants on it.

We kept on that course until a rock off the shores at the southeasterly end of Coal Island lined up with a patch of arbutus trees on the island. Then we turned right along the reef. We could see the kelp over the reef and fished about 100 yards out from it, but when the tide is running hard you can't see the kelp and you are strictly on landmarks.

Newton Lineup

We continued on that course until we lined up a notch on the end of Mt. Newton on the Vancouver Island shore with the first of the outside trees on the little group of islands to the south. Then you start turning right. If you go any further you will hang up as we did once or twice when we took our eyes off the landmarks for a few seconds. You continue on until you reach the first "mark." Then go around again.

It was on that course that we got all our fish.

But sometimes they are found at the northeasterly tip of Coal Island and there is a big reef running out from there beyond which you must fish.

Head for that spot by lining up the tip of James Island and two easterly points of Dock Island, and proceeding on that course until you get beyond the spit to a point where a tree on the spit at your left lines up with a bald spot on Stuart Island. Then you are past the reef, and can turn to the left, but there is often a strong current in these waters and you have to watch it doesn't push you on to the reef.

Sounder Helps

Rhys explains that a depth sounder would help you find the reefs in these waters and to get your marks, but you couldn't fish by a depth sounder, because the reefs are almost straight up and down and when you are upon them you will hang up.

"There must by $10,000 worth of tackle on that reef," laughs Rhys, who of course is in the tackle business.

Never turn with the tide. Always turn away, if you want to get back to your markers," he advises.

At James Island and Sidney Island the bottom slopes much more gradually and it is easier to fish with the heavier gear, or with a depth sounder.

Bob and Rhys fish very slowly for the winter chinooks.

"You can tell by the angle of the line if you are going the right speed," explained Bob.

"If you are too shallow, you don't get many. You must be within 10 feet of the bottom to get these big winters," he said.

Ancient Strip

Rhys said he likes to use strip that has been cut for some time . . . maybe for as long as six months. It lasts longer for trolling, he explains, but adds that freshly cut strip is better for mooching.

Rhys called the shot on this fishing trip. "We have been getting them around noon, but maybe we better try the early morning ebb," he said the night before.

We got out there for the early morning ebb, but up until noon we had only landed a few rockfish, which I kept for filleting, because in my house those whitefish fillets go down even better than salmon.

Then, just as we opened up the lunch kits at about 12:15, the first fish struck . . . an 11-pounder. We hadn't even got that line back in the water before the second fish hit . . . a better-than-20 pounder. More action followed fast and furious. In a couple of hours it was all over, and everything went dead.

Winter chinook fishing is like that. If you fish the hours and if your gear is working right, and you fish the right depths, you will get fish . . . eventually.

Olympics Choices Puzzle

By RAY KERR

Ever since the Canadian championship was completed late last summer in Montreal, chess players and boosters across the nation have been speculating about this year's national Olympic team.

The feeling was that the team should be based on the performance in the championship which, after all, was a zonal tournament, leading to world championship playoffs qualification for Vancouver's Duncan Suttles, 23, the eventual winner.

But, as in previous years, all this was only wishful thinking.

According to information I received a few days ago from Toronto, Mr. Suttles will not play on first board in Siegen, West Germany, starting Sept. 3.

Instead, Abe Yanofski, the mayor of West Kildonan, a suburb of Winnipeg, again will lead the Canadian sextet, although he didn't even show up in Montreal.

With all due credit to Mr. Yanofski, I feel that Mr. Suttles, a Canadian champion with excellent results in recent international tournaments, should have been placed on the top board. Mr. Yanofski still would have been a strong boost to the team in the No. 2 spot.

Some of the other selections are equally puzzling.

There's no quarrel with Toronto's Zvonko Vranesic playing third board. After all, Mr. Suttles needed a playoff to finally subdue the stubborn 30-year-old University of Toronto professor.

But Montreal's Leslie Witt only tied for fourth place with Toronto's Bruce Amos, yet Mr. Witt is on Board 4, while Geza Fuster of Toronto, who was third in the championship, is second alternate, or actually Board 6. Mr. Amos is first alternate, which is a wise choice since he's only 22.

So there you are—the Canadian team has been picked, and again it seems to be the case of not what you know, but who you know.

Mr. Amos, incidentally, is already getting valuable experience on the international scene, playing a strong tournament at Reykjavik, Iceland.

After the first six rounds, several-times Yugoslav champion Milan Matulovich was in front with five points, with Mr. Amos half a point behind with three wins and three draws.

Here's a sixth-round game where Mr. Amos as black neatly demolishes Bent Thorsteinsson, one of Iceland's better players.

White, Thorsteinsson—Black, Amos: 1. P-K4, P-QB4; 2. N-KB3, P-Q3; 3. P-Q4, PxP; 4. NxP, N-KB3; 5. N-QB3, P-K3; 6. P-KB4, B-K2; 7. Q-B3, N-B3; 8. B-K3, P-K4; 9. NxN, PxN; 10. PxP, PxP; 11. B-QB4, O-O; 12. P-KR3, R-QN1; 13. O-O, Q-R4; 14. BN3, BK3; 15. K-R1, P-B4; 16. N-Q5. BxN; 17. PxB, B-Q3- 18. P-QB4, Q-B2; 19. QR-N1, N-K1; 20. B-B2, P-N3; 21. B-R6, N-N2; 22. P-KN4?

(White is overly optimistic, and this move will finally cost him. He could have tried for repetition with 22. Q-B6, N-R4; 23. Q-B2, N-N2. But even here black can try for a win with 23 . . . R-K1; 24. P-KN4, N-B5.)

A fine effort by Mr. Amos, who lost his opening and closing games in the Canadian championship, or he might have challenged right for the top.

Back to our problesm-and-solutions corner. This week it's an interesting position from the Canadian championship, again, and we'll give you details and the solution next week. Send answers to me, care of The Daily Colonist, and I'll run names and addresses of those with correct answers.

White—K-KB2, Q-QN5, B-KB1, N-QN1, Pawns, QR4, QB4, Q5, K4, KB3, KN4, KR3 (11 pieces). Black—K-KN2, Q-QR4, B-Q7, N-KB5, Pawns, QB4, K4, KB2, KN4, KR5 (nine pieces).

Black to move and win!

Tractor Policy Needed

Farm vehicles, including tractors, must be covered under the new compulsory motor vehicle liability insurance, the B.C. Federation of Agriculture has warned farm organizations.

The federation advises farmers to consult their insurance agent and have their tractor(s) included in their general farm policy in the same manner as their farm truck.

Persons who drive tractors on highways without a pink slip are liable to a fine of $250 or three months imprisonment.

By KITTE TURMELL

Mark the following statements true or false to check your friendship type.

● Most of my friends know each other because we all go to the same church or school True—— False——.

● My family thinks it is more important to have friends for a long time, than casual friends wherever we go. True—— False——. True—— False——.

● When a friend does something I don't like, I make a point of asking my friend to explain the trouble so as to clear up any misunderstanding. True—— False——.

● I believe I can tell my friends everything I think and feel and they should tell me everything they feel and think. True—— False——.

● I take advice from my friends and we all do the same thing. True—— False——.

● I have five or more good friends. True—— False——.

● I will go to a meeting or a party even though I don't feel like it because I wouldn't want to disappoint my friends. True—— False——.—

If you have answered True to most of the above statements, you are typical of two-thirds of a test group checked out at the University of Michigan.

Two University of Michigan sociologist, Edward O. Laumann and Howard Schuman, have gathered data in the Detroit area for several years regarding various types of friendship." They have found that people who make a "closed group" differ in many respects from those whose friends are socially unrelated to one another.

"For example, if John is a close friend of Tom, Dick and Harry and those three are close friends to one another, a socialigist says that John's friendship network is "interlocking." If Tom, Dick and Harry are not friends of one another, John's friendship network is described as "radial." Radial friendship patterns are not typical of young people or the aged. They occur almost exclusively in the 30 to 60 age bracket.

"The far more intimate friendships, interlocking patterns, are very important to the growth of young people. Young people, by the way, have more intimate relationships with friends than any other age group. Therefore, choosing friends carefully at this age is most important.

"If you are a member of an interlocking network (most of us are), you are gregarious. You feel an ethnic identity. You have many friends, and see a great deal of your friends."

If you checked False on most of the statements on that quick quiz at start, your friendship pattern is the "radial." According to Mr. Laumann, "only one third of the Detroit sample had radial patterns of friendship. Within given educational levels, the brighter the individual, the more likely he is to have a radial friendship pattern. We also find that members of radial groups tend to choose friends for special purposes, such as a common interest in a hobby or sport.

"If your friendship pattern is radial, you are likely to be politically independent, open-minded, a Protestant, and a social comer. You can enjoy yourself without the company of others and don't discuss your personal problems with friends. In fact, you are likely to report having few friends. You prefer the independence of your own business to the security of a job in a large bureaucracy."

According to the study, "In American society young men and women must expect to lose some of these close friendships as they grow up and are intimate only with their families. Social, economic and geographic mobility make it necessary to "hang loose" with friends.

"Europeans differ in that they tend to make a few friendships which remain for life. Hence, Europeans are often critical of what they call the superficiality of Americans' friendships."

LETTERS

Dear Kitte Turmell; I met this guy at a dance and we were together until it was over. He was even nice enough to take me home. My problem is I thought I loved him but have found out I'm not ready to get serious about anyone yet. I'm 16, so have plenty of time to find out whom I really love.

He has bought me a sweetheart ring and I've had it about six weeks. Last time I broke up with him he tried to commit suicide. I told him I'd go back with him but I wasn't serious about him and didn't know if I ever would be. He said he wanted me. Now I know not even a chance is possible for us. What should I do?—Confused.

Dear Confused: Tell him the truth about how you feel. Say you'd like to keep the friendship but have no serious romantic feelings about him.

Advise him to date other girls. Urge him to see a family-service-agency counselor or church advisor for a talk-out on problems, including the suicide urge.

Dear Kitte: I am 12 years old and I would like to model clothes. I would like to know where to write or call.

My measurements are 34-24-32. Do you think I could qualify?—Marge.

Dear Marge: Check at leading department stores and at teen shops that sell your size. Ask what they recommend in a modeling school suitable for your age. Talk to your school counselor about what courses to take in physical education, to boost your poise and improve your posture and the way you walk. Learn more about clothes in a home economics class for sewing.

Dear Kitte: Is it proper to remove the hair from your arms? If so, should you use a cream or shave them?—Hairy.

Dear Hairy: Most feel it is proper to remove hair when there is so heavy a growth that you are embarrassed. You may remove hair from arms with creams or shaving. You may also use a bleach. Check with your family doctor and druggist for safe procedure.

You may need professional medical care on how to control excessive growth of hair.

Yoga, Fly-Tying, Shakespeare

School Spurs Initiative

It's everything from yoga to Shakespeare Thursday afternoons at Oak Bay junior high school.

Following a Greater Victoria school board policy designed to give principals enough autonomy to put some of their own ideas into action, Peter Boldt, Oak Bay junior high school principal, set up a series of extra-curricular mini-courses.

First, he polled the students to see what they wanted to learn about, assessed the results, and then activated his scheme.

He found the students wanted to know about such unrelated things as the function of the police force in the community, fly-tying, the use of transits, typing, yoga, wrestling, many of the roles in the works of Shakespeare, semantics, and what a fire department unit does when it leaves the hall on an alarm.

The end result was 34 courses of four weeks duration.

Mr. Boldt is the first to admit that a total of four hours can do no more than whet the student's interest in the subject he is studying.

"We're not trying to give definitive answers on such subjects as the state of the black man in today's society nor are we giving lessons on bridge," he said.

"But if we can awaken an interest in any one of these in the minds of our students then, I think, we are achieving a worthwhile purpose.

"These studies are just what the name implies — mini. They are, however, motivated mostly by the students and could, I think, lead to research and discovery on the part of the participants.

Mr. Boldt feels that the number of students participating is proof of the success of the mini-course idea.

There are about 1,000 students in Oak Bay junior high and 650 are devoting the last hour of each Thursday afternoon to the mini-courses. The remainder go to a moving picture shown in the gymnasium.

Finding instructors for the mini courses hasn't been easy but, in this respect, said Mr. Boldt, the pupils have been helpful.

They have sought out expert people and persuaded them to help; they have found expertise among their own numbers and they have tapped the varied skills of the teaching staff.

"It hasn't been easy but the result has been good," said Mr. Boldt.

Flanked by Neil Watson, 13, and Sarah Horning, 13, Oak Bay principal Peter Boldt teaches fundamentals of harmonica.

California Hippies 'Do It Now:' Teach Drug Education Course

LOS ANGELES (AP) — For $8,000, a group of hippies has been hired by a school district to conduct an in-school drug education program.

The self-described hippies and former drug users have been meeting with students, parents, teachers and community leaders for six weeks in the Paramount School District.

The hippies are members of the Do It Now Foundation, a nonprofit educational and charitable organization set up two years ago by former drug users and professional people.

Until they received the Paramount assignment, the foundation's 25 active members had worked with state and county officials, social workers and college students. They also man a 24-hour crisis phone line.

In its school program, the foundation members use light shows, films, records, seminars and person-to-person contact. They stress statements by Allen Ginsberg, Timothy Leary, the Beatles, and other hip culture leaders against hard drugs, such as heroin.

"It's the teachers and parents who need the information," says Nancy Gray, a co-director of the foundation. "We have found the kids usually have heard the facts about drugs; they just don't believe them."

One reason youngsters tend to ignore their parents' and teachers' advice about drugs, she said, is that adults are ignorant about the subject. As an example, she cited marijuana.

"The establishment told the kids that marijuana is a killer weed and will lead to heroin addiction," she said. "The kids try it and find the dire predictions are not true, so they no longer trust what the establishment says."

Golden Discs Slightly Tarnished

By KING LEE

The glitter has almost gone from the gold record.

It used to be a crowning achievement for an artist to earn a gold record ($1,000,000 in sales), but too many gold records are being given out these days to make them meaningful.

The figure of $1,000,000 is reached by crediting a manufacturer for half the suggested retail price of an album. A sales figure of slightly more than 400,000 copies qualifies it for a gold record.

On that basis, almost every album that reaches the top 20 in a national survey makes it.

Just a little ridiculous.

In 1959, for instance, one single, The Kingston Trio's Tom Dooley, and six albums, topped by the soundtrack of the musical South Pacific, got the Recording Industry Association of America certification as a gold disc.

It was a little different in 1969. A total of 150 gold records were issued, going to performers such as The Ohio Express, The Foundations, The Brooklyn Bridge, Tyrone Davis, Clarence Carter, Classics IV, 1910 Fruitgum Company and many more "one-shot" artists. Tom Jones collected eight of them last year. Elvis Presley and the Beatles got five each, Glen Campbell had six and Blood, Sweat and Tears got four. Aretha Franklin, Judy Collins, Dean Martin, Simon and Garfunkel, Bob Dylan and Lou Rawls also got one.

Presley now has 48 of them. The Beatles have 34. Although Capitol Records could order extra copies of gold albums for each member of the group, the Beatles don't even bother, directing Capitol to order one and file it somewhere in England.

Even before a record is released by a major artist or group it is, or can be, a certified million-seller.

The record industry became a $1 billion business last year. The idea of the gold record must grow along with the volume of business.

Perhaps the qualifications migh tbe raised to 2,000,000 copies of singles and $2,000,000 in sales for albums.

A good comparison might be if the motion picture industry started handing out 150 Oscars every year.

Engagements and Weddings

Engagements

Russell — Kirby

Mr. and Mrs. James Russell, 1325 Finlayson Street, take pleasure in announcing the engagement of their youngest daughter, Marjorie Lynne, to Mr. Nicholas J. Kirby, son of Mr. G. H. Kirby, Ottawa, Ontario.

The wedding will take place on Saturday, March 28th, 1970 at 8 p.m. in St. Michael and All Angel's Church, West Saanich Road, the Reverend W. E. Greenhalgh officiating.

McNulty — Simpson

Mr. J. M. McNulty, MBE, and Mrs. McNulty, Bramhall, Cheshire, England, announce the engagement of their daughter, Patricia Jane, to Mr. Hamish Ian Fisher Simpson, son of Mrs. F. G. Simpson, 1701 Beach Drive, Victoria, and the late Mr. J. I. Simpson.

The marriage will take place on July 25th in Cheshire, England.

McColl — Elgood

Mr. and Mrs. David N. McColl, Beach Drive, Chemainus, are pleased to announce the forthcoming marriage of their only daughter, Lynne Merrilee, to Mr. Terry Elgood, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Elgood, Surrey, B.C.

The wedding will take place March 7, 1970 at 2 p.m. in St. Michael's and All Angel's Anglican Church, Chemainus, Reverend Wm. J. Hill officiating.

Breuls — Dodds

Mr. and Mrs. James G. Breuls announce the engagement of their daughter Cheryle Marise to Mr. James Murdock Dodds, son of Dr. and Mrs. William A. Dodds. Setting for the wedding is St. Mary's Anglican Church, Kerrisdale, Vancouver, 7:00 p.m. March 20th, Reverend H. Taudin-Chabot, officiating.

Weddings

West — Gadsden

Queen Margaret's School, Duncan, was the setting of the afternoon wedding of Frances Alice, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Gadsden of Duncan, to Mr. William Anthony West, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. R. West of Victoria, on January 17, 1970, Father Walter Donald officiating.

The bridal attendants were Mrs. Marian Flinton, matron of honor. Mrs. Anita Alpaugh and Miss Suzanne Bradford attendants, and Miss Lana Halme, flower girl. Best man was Mr. Alan Hughes, Victoria. The ushers were Mr. Christopher Gadsden and Mr. Gary Alpaugh.

The reception was held at the Silver Bridge Inn where Mr. Edward Sutton proposed the toast to the bride. After a honeymoon in San Francisco and San Diego, the couple are now residing in Victoria. Many thanks to all of their friends who made this occasion so happy.

Entwisle — Cox

The marriage of Evelina Anne Cox to Albert Frank Entwisle took place in Victoria on Monday, February 16th, 1970.

Mr. and Mrs. Entwisle are active members of the Saanich Silver Threads and Victoria Aged Pensioners No. 3. They will reside at 880 Jasmine Avenue, Victoria.

Bath — Flett

A double-ring ceremony was solemnized on February 7, 1970, at 7 p.m., in Fairfield United Church, when Roberta Vivienne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Flett, 1535 Carnarvon Street, exchanged vows with Mr. Leonard Mark Bath, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Bath, 1348 Chapman Street. Reverend H. W. Karley officiated.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was lovely in a floor-length gown of Chantilly lace over fitted satin, featuring bell sleeves with scalloped lace edges. The matching train was gathered at the waist back by a bridal bow. A rhinestone tiara held the chapel-length veil of pearl studded tulle. She carried a cascade bouquet of mauve and white carnations. Maid of honor Miss Barbara Post and bridesmaid Miss Janice Zaccarelli wore gowns of mauve chiffon over taffeta with mauve lace tiaras and pearl crown headdresses. They carried crescent bouquets of mauve and white carnations. Mr. Rick Jancowski was best man and Mr. Robert Paine ushered the guests.

After the ceremony a reception was held at Holyrood House. Mr. A. Brown gave a toast to the bride and music was supplied by Mr. Bert Zala's orchestra. On their return from their honeymoon Mr. and Mrs. Bath will reside in Victoria.

The Victoria Press Ltd. shall not be liable for re-insertion of any advertisement beyond the amount paid for such advertisement.

In the event of an error occurring the liability of Victoria Press Ltd., shall not exceed the charge for the space actually occupied by the item in question.

All claims on errors in publication shall be made within 12 hours thereafter and if not made shall not be considered. No claim will be allowed for more than one insertion nor for errors not affecting the value of the advertisement.

All estimates of cost are approximate. Advertisers will be charged with space actually used.

All advertising copy will be subject to the approval of the Victoria Press Ltd., who reserve the right in its sole discretion to classify, reject or insert copy furnished.

Advertisements must comply with the British Columbia Human Rights Act which prohibits any advertising that discriminates against any person because of his race, religion, sex, colour, nationality, ancestry or place of origin, or because his age is between 44 and 65 years, unless the condition is justified by a bona fide requirement for the work involved.

While every endeavour will be made to forward replies to box numbers to the advertiser as soon as possible, we accept no liability in respect of loss or damage alleged to arise through either failure or delay in forwarding such replies, however caused, whether by negligence or otherwise.

Vaughan-Birch, The Sands Mortuary Ltd., and Mrs. Hugh Thomas, Organist. Vic Dawson and Alan Ghinar.

We wish to thank our friends for their lovely flowers, cards, letters and donations to the heart fund in our recent loss of a loving husband, father and grandfather. Also special thanks to Dr. R. Stirling, Dr. McKay and staff of St. Joseph's Hospital, Dr. Parsons and Sands Funeral Directors. — Win Paterson and family.

9 IN MEMORIAM

BUSE—In loving memory of Joyce Buse, who passed away Feb. 22, 1968.
The flowers we place upon your grave,
May wither and decay.
But love for you who sleeps beneath,
Will never fade away.
—Sadly missed by her mother and sisters and brothers.

HEWITSON — In loving memory of mother and grandmother, Annie, who passed away February 22nd, 1967
—Fondly remembered by Edith, Jennie, Tom and families.

McDONALD — In loving memory of a dear Mother, who passed away Feb. 28, 1969.
—Sadly missed by Annie, Harry, Albert, Jessie and the children.

MAMMEL—In loving memory of our dear husband and father, Julius Mammel who passed away Feb. 23, 1968.
Silently remembered every day
Sadly missed along life's way
Just as you were, you will always be Treasured in our memories.
—Your loving wife Ottilia and family.

Sunday Highlights

"You've got 'til 10:30 p.m. Eastern Standard Time to get out of town. That's 7:30 Pacific, 9:30 Central."

9:15 a.m. — A new program called Child in the Family. I have no idea what it's about—6, 8.

C-12:00 noon — The good Experiment in TV series returns with Dream on Monkee Mountain, a poetic fantasy set in Trinidad—5.

C-1:00 p.m. — Landmark, the CBC natural-resources series, ends with a one-hour wrapup—2, 6.

2:00—Premier Bennett talks to Capital Comment—6, 8.

● 3:00 — World of Music has a smasher: the Borodin String Quartet playing Borodin's beautiful second string quartet. Logical—2.

C-6:00 — More Billy Graham, and still more is due next Friday—12.

C-7:30—Voyage to the Enchanted Isle is a special about Darwin's trip to the Galapagos. Prince Philip narrates—8.

C-8:30—A rerun of a fairish Pogo special—5.

C-9:00—Sunday at Nine has another adman drama—2, 6.

● 9:00—This week's silent film is a 1926 railroad epic called Webs of Steel. If this had been filmed last year, would they call it Hard Rider?—9.

C-10:00—Perry Como's latest special has Bob Hope, Nancy Sinatra, Flip Wilson as guests—5.

Sunday Sports

C-10:55 a.m.—Basketball: New York at Baltimore—4.
C-11:00—NHL hockey, Boston at Chicago—7, 12.
C-4:00 p.m.—Another world ski final report—5.

Sunday Movies

10:00 a.m.—Prince of Foxes (murky 1949 Medicis), Tyrone Power, Orson Welles, Everett Sloane—11.

1:30 p.m. — Keep 'em Flying (1941 Abbott and Costello)—5.

1:30—Crooks Anonymous (1963 carry-on stuff)—12.

2:30—The Body Disappears (1941 mystery-comedy). Watch Edward Everett Horton steal all the scenes—4.

2:30—Francis Over the Big Town (1955 NO). Only for people who like Donald O'Connor, or mules—7.

3:00—Follow the Sun (hopelessly awful 1951 Ben Hogan story), Glenn Ford, Donna Reed—11.

C-6:00—Inn of the Sixth Happiness (fairish 1958 valiant lady stuff), Robert Donat, Ingrid Bergman, Curt Jurgens. Not worth the time—11.

● C-7:00—Born Free (1966, probably the best animal film), Bill Travers, Virginia McKenna point with pride—7, 12.

C-9:00—Family Jewels (1965 Jerry Lewis)—4.

C-11:20—Five-Day Lover (1961 French romanticomedy), Jean Seberg. Like so many European films, ruined by dubbing—6.

11:30—Death, Where Is Thy Victory? (1963 French suspense). New to me, but it's a dubber—4.

11:30—Smuggler's Island (1951 nothing), Jeff Chandler, Evelyn Keyes. Names that will live forever—7.

C-11:40—Oklahoma Territory (1959 western bore). The late movie tonight on CBLT in Toronto was D. W. Griffiths' 1916 classic intolerance. We get Oklahoma Territory—2.

Sunday Radio

4:00 p.m.—NHL hockey, Montreal at Detroit—CBU (690).

5:05—More goodies on Remember When—CJVI (900).

7:00—Opera Theatre has two by Puccini, Il Tabarro and La Boheme. Quite a double bill—CBU-FM (105.7).

7:35—Stereopera is Rossini's Barber of Seville—CFMS (98.5).

8:00—Your Two Bucks Worth, the weekly CBC report on program highlights for this week—CBU.

8:30—A Toronto Symphony Orchestra concert with cellis Mstislav Rostropovich. They join to play Bloch's Schelomo—CBU.

Monday Highlights

● C-8:00 p.m. — Monday last week was filled with specials. Today is filled with regulars, led by Laugh-In, whose strange faces are led by Ringo Starr. Will he be a Farkel or a Burfle? — 5.

● C-9:00—Black Journal is one of NET's best—9.

Monday Movies

NOTE: Same old story — the only recommended movies are due on Wednesday (2) and Friday (2).

10:00 a.m. — Snowbound (1947 suspense), Robert Newton, Dennis Price. Almost a museum piece—4.

12:45 noon—Kitten with a Whip (1964 delinquent drivel), Ann-Margret, and she didn't even look good — 6, 8.

3:30 p.m. — Flight to Nowhere (1946 atom secrets). No names, no plot, no interest. Nowhere — 13.

5:30—Sailor of the King (poor 1953 war drama), Jeff Hunter, Wendy Hiller, Michael Rennie. Every time this appears, I knock it; every time I knock it, I get nasty letters. It's sort of a seagoing Cardinal — 12.

C 8:30—Teacher's Pet (farish 1958 romanticomedy), Clark Gable, Doris Day, Gig Young. If she made any good movies, this is it — 4.

8:30—Journey Into Light (fairish 1954 minister finds faith), Sterling Hayden, Thomas Mitchell—13.

C-9:00 — Ritual of Evil (new supernatural effort), Louis Jourdan, Anne Baxter. She's the No. 1 TV guest — 5.

C-11:30 — Mississippi Gambler (crumby 1953 crapout), Tyrone Power, Piper Laurie. The Gaylord Ravenal story — 7.

11:45 — Under the Gun (1954 prison bore), Richard Conte, Same Jaffe, John McIntire. Yawn — 2.

C-12:00 — And God Created Woman (1956 Bardot). Her first skin flick, but minus the skin bits now — 6.

1:05 a.m. — Iron Glove (sappy 1954 costumer), Robert Stack. Have you ever seen such a dumb day? — 5.

1:30 — No title. It might be the day's best — 13.

Monday Radio

2:00 p.m. — Afternoon Concert devotes its week to folk tales, myths, sagas, romances and the like. That's my kind of music — CBU-FM (105.7).

8:00 — The CBC devotes its FM evening to Benjamin Britten —CBU- FM.

8:05 — Gala Performance has music by Haydn, Mozart, Dvorak and Samuel Barber — CFMS (98.5).

39 PERSONALS

GROWING TO DOUBT THE honesty, sincerity and integrity of today's man. I wonder if there is a man, 50-65, of at least moderately normal humor, education, culture, and intelligence who is wanting more in life than just an evening's passing fancy? One who is willing to devote time and effort to forming at least a friendship of some decency and permanence. Must be free to marry, willing and able to support a normal standard of living, be kind and considerate and affectionate. In return he would get a wife and companion for those lonely retirement years, who looks upon marriage as a mutual adventure, full of interest and enjoyment rather than just a mere housekeeping job. Interested in nearly everything — travel — entertaining — etc. Object matrimony if mutually agreeable. No phone numbers. All letters answered. Victoria Press, Box 378. Photos returned.

THOUGHTFUL AND CONSIderate young man 24, would like to meet young lady 20-30. One or two children quite acceptable. Object matrimony. Photo appreciated as well as honesty. Please reply to Victoria Press, Box 284.

WIDOW WOULD LIKE TO HEAR from widowers about 60. Have car would like snap and particulars with phone number. Letters answered. Victoria Press, Box 371.

YOUNG MAN, NEW IN TOWN, like music, sports, would like to meet young lady. Children welcome. Victoria Press, Box 606.

SEGOVIA RECITAL — DOUBLE price offered for 3 seats. Not necessarily together. Victoria Press, Box 367, or phone 388-6533.

UNATTACHED MAN, 43, NEEDS woman companion and housekeeper. Please apply Victoria Press, Box 386.

ADVENTUROUS BACHELOR, 26, travelling world by car in April, seeks companion. Share expenses. 382-8790.

WILL ALEX W. JACQUET OR anyone knowing his whereabouts please contact Victoria Press, Box 749. Urgent matter.

RIDE TO TOWN WANTED FROM Sooke Rd. at Humphack between 7:30-8 a.m. 478-1975.

70s AT '69 PRICES!

Here are a couple of GMC Handi-Vans that must go. Both are long wheelbase models, with heavy-duty axles, springs and brakes. One is a 250 six, the other a 307 eight. The six has windows all around, the eight has them in rear and side doors, and both have three-speed automatics and six-ply truck tires.
We are prepared to make an attractive deal on these; why not come in and talk about it?

LOCATION
$38,900

Not too often do we find homes that fit all the qualifications noted above. LOCATION — Not too many sales in this area, people just don't want to leave once they settle in; just south of Craigdarroch Castle. CHARACTER — an older home, updated to modern conveniences. For example you should see the kitchen, smart as today, with lovely breakfast nook. FOUR BEDROOMS — all on the second floor. It would be unfair to the Vendors to allow dirve-bys on this one. It's the inside that is so DELIGHTFUL. I am available to supply further details and to set up appointments to view. Please call B. E. JEFFERY, 385-7707 anytime.

UPLANDS
BRAND NEW
$98,500

Planter Gives Beachcomber Pink Charge

SAN BERNARDINO, Calif. (UPI) — Beverly Duval had her heart set on turning a beachcombing souvenir into a planter for her petunias, but a neighbor warned her it was a depth charge.

Sure enough, it was.

A navy bomb expert was called and carted it off to the Naval Ordnance Centre at China Lake. Mrs. Duval thought she had lost her potential planter.

Not so. Saturday two navymen returned the depth charge—disarmed—and painted pink.

Mrs. Duval, overjoyed at having a pink petunia planter, penned a note of gratitude as follows:

"With great depth of feeling I want to say thanks to the navy for the tremendous personal charge you have given me by returning my souvenir in such ship shape condition."

Social Security Official Arrives

Victorians and Vancouver Island residents employed in U.S. after 1936 can inquire about their U.S. social security status at the U.S. immigration service office, Canadian Pacific dock building, 468 Belleville, from noon to 4:30 p.m. Thursday and from 8:30 to noon Friday.

Everett Rightmire, field representative of the United States social security administration district office in Bellingham, Wash. will be on hand to assist those making inquiries.

Gain Final

University of Calgary Dinosaurs and University of Alberta Golden Bears completed sweeps of their best-of-three semi-finals Saturday in the Western Canada Intercollegiate Athletic Association hockey league, Calgary defeating visiting UBC, 8-1, and Alberta downing University of Manitoba, 7-5, in Edmonton.

'Canada First' Emphasized

The Carleton University professors who warned last year that a "Canada-first" hiring policy is needed for Canadian universities to prevent their being overrun by American teaching staff, will speak Wednesday at the University of Victoria. Professors James Steele and Robin Mathews will speak at the Student Union Building at 1:30.

Marathon Standards Laid Down

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time in its history the Boston marathon will have qualification standards this year in hopes of discouraging "exhibitionists" and other non-serious runners.

Sponsors of the world-famous 26-mile, 385-yard run from Hopkinton to Boston have announced the new requirements saying they are "flexible enough to accommodate all legitimate runners" for the 74th annual running of the event on Monday, April 20.

The new rules say that each applicant to have his entry accepted must meet at least one of the following requirements:

- Completed within four hours any previous Boston marathon or any other sanctioned marathon.
- Completed at least two sanctioned races of 10 miles or more in the last year.
- Submit the certification of either his district Amateur Athletic Union long-distance chairman or a recognized coach that the applicant has trained sufficiently to cover the course in less than four hours.

University Students

Tories Reject Fee Proposal

A paper advocating that university fees in B.C. be raised by $500 was rejected Saturday by a policy conference of the B.C. Progressive Conservative party held at the University of Victoria.

The paper, presented by John Cherrington and George Gibault, themselves students at UBC, contended that individuals who benefit most from university education should be paying for it. This would take part of the burden off the taxpayer, the paper said.

The policy conference decided that high education benefits not only the individual but society as a whole, and raising fees to the extent suggested for the reason given was not acceptable.

The conference considered a recommendation that labor unions build anti-pollution clauses into their contracts where applicable.

It was also suggested that the party endorse candidates at the municipal level who are willing to put forward suggestions for controlling pollution in their own area. No action was taken on either question.

LAW STUDENT

Provincial party leader John de Wolfe and chartered accountant David Sinclair, both of Vancouver, outlined an economic policy for the next 20 years that they said would enable the province to afford the social services it will need in that time.

Alan Pope of Timmins, Ont., a third-year law student at York University, Toronto, who is national president of the Progressive Conservative Student Federation, addressed the plenary session of the conference.

He said 90,000 persons are coming into the 21 to 24-year-old voting age group each year, and the Progressive Conservatives can hope to get only one in five unless the party stirred itself.

While he made no specific recommendations, he said young Progressive Conservatives should take an independent policy line on their own, as much in accord with the needs and wants of the young people of Canada as they can possibly make it.

REPRESENTS NEEDS

They will have to force the leadership of the party at all levels to take into account the policy proposals the student federation feels best represent the needs of younger Canadians, he said.

About 30 persons from Vancouver, Victoria, UVic and U.B.C. attended sessions Saturday in Lansdowne College at UVic.

BEDDING PLANTS — (W. S., Victoria): The first requisite in an annual bedding plant is a very long season of bloom, which is why annual flowers are almost always chosen for this role in the garden. While it is something of a nuisance to have to buy and set out new plants every spring to provide color in the ornamental beds and planters out front, such annuals as petunias and salvias remain in bloom far longer than any of the common perennials.

Perennials are best grouped by themselves or combined with smallish flowering shrubs, and a mixture planted in such a way that when one kind of plant is finishing its blooming period, another is just coming into bloom, thereby maintaining color and interest throughout the growing season. With the long-blooming annuals, on the other hand, it is best to stick with one kind per bed, massing them boldly to create an eye-catching splash of color.

PLANTS FOR SHADE — (K. L., Deep Cove): Some good perennial plants for the shaded portions of the garden are: Campanulas in variety, columbines, fritillarias, foxgloves, monkshood, primulas, sedums, some lilies, violas, and the grassy species of iris.

Regarding shrubs, nearly all the broad-leafed evergreens will tolerate light or partial shade, particularly the Oregon grape, barberries, pieris, daphne and the Portugal laurel. Among the deciduous shrubs I can recommend the shrubby honeysuckles, flowering currant, spiraea, red osier dogwood and the European red elder.

CREOSOTED BOXES — (M. Mc.V, Nanaimo): It is true that the fumes of creosote are poisonous to plant life; it would be unsafe, therefore, to attempt growing plants in the wooden seed boxes you treated with creosote. Cuprinol, a preparation available from most paint stores, is a safe rot-proofing solution, or you can treat seed boxes, stakes, coldframes and the like with a saturated solution of copper sulphate in water.

I think about the best thing you can do with your creosoted boxes is to char them over lightly with a blow torch. This should get rid of any creosote fumes, and the slight charring would acturally help rotproof the wood.

BOTANICAL TERM — (G. R., Victoria): The letters fl. pl. following the name of a plant are an abbreviation for the words "flore pleno," meaning double flowers. For instance, Prunus triloba fl. pl. is the double-flowered form of the ornamental flowering plum as opposed to the ordinary single flowered form.

BAMBOO PLANTS — (A. N., Colwood): It is a fairly common thing for bamboo plants to suffer a setback after transplanting, and I am not surprised that the specimen you bought and planted last October should be looking dried and withered now.

I am reasonably confident, though, that the plant will make a comeback and start into new growth around the end of April. If the clump seems crowded and congested, it would help to thin out the young starting shoots, cutting away perhaps about half of the weaker ones.

Don't be disappointed if growth is slow and lacks vigor this summer, for it takes bamboo at least a year to get itself properly established. Just see that your plant does not go short of moisture this summer.

WINTER JASMINE — (W. F., Royal Oak): The winter-flowering jasmine — the one with yellow blooms — should be pruned and the new shoots tied in to its wall as soon as it finishes blooming. This plant bears its blossoms on wood produced during the previous season, so all shoots which have borne blooms may be cut back almost to their point of origin. This will encourage the production of new shoots which will bear blossoms next winter.

Potholes to Order

I just finished attending a pothole convention in Pittsburgh, Pa. Pothole makers from all over the world jammed the city's hotels and motels, and officials of the National Pothole Association said it was the most successful meeting they ever had.

Hiram H. Patches, president of the NPA, said, "Thanks to a very bad winter, pothole production has tripled in the 1969-1970 season. We've had potholes where we've never had potholes before.

"At one time you only saw potholes in the poorer neighborhoods and on unpaved streets. But now, because of new technological breakthroughs, you'll find potholes on paved suburban roads as well as highways and bridges. We can't keep up with the demand."

Patches took me to the exhibition hall where equipment as well as designs for potholes were on display.

"Most potholes used to be rectangular, but we're getting demands for potholes in every shape and form. This kidney-shaped one is very popular, and this oval one has been moving quite well, and this zigzag pothole is a winner."

"You mean you can deliver a pothole made to order?"

"Of course. When you have a pothole on a highway or a main street, you don't want one that looks ugly and doesn't fit in with the landscape."

"How do you make a pothole?" I asked.

"It's very complicated," Patches said, "and there are many methods. The old fashioned way of making a pothole was to dig up a street and then fill it in again with a cheaper subsurface material. Before the material hardened, you would send a truck over it and it would make a pothole any size you wanted.

"But the difficulty with this method was that it was too expensive to dig up the streets just to make a pothole. So our research people attacked the problem.

"They discovered that if you use a cheap asphalt or a thin tar surface on the roads, all you need to make a good-sized pothole are enough vehicles passing over it. Now most of our potholes are made by using cheaper material and bad labor."

"What kind of pothole makers are those?" I asked, pointing to a very interesting display which showed what happens to the chassis of a car that hit a pothole.

"That's our freeze-and-thaw road breaker. We have discovered that by freezing a road or highway to zero temperature, and then thawing it, you can make potholes automatically. The size depends on how many heavy trucks and buses roll over the surface.

"We can make a pothole with an automobile as well, but it takes twice as long as it does with a good solid truck."

We walked along and came to a theatre where I noticed someone getting an award. "What's going on?"

"Every year, to publicize potholes, we give an award to the city that has the most potholes. Pittsburgh won this year, though I must say it was close; New York, Chicago, Cleveland and Detroit are all protesting that they should have gotten the prize."

"There seems to be a great market for potholes. Who buys them?"

"Our biggest customers are elected officials."

"I don't understand."

"Most politicians, particularly those up for election, want to do something for the people. So they order the potholes from us. Once they've been installed, the voters complain about them, and then the officials arrange for the potholes to be filled in. This way the politicians win the undying gratitude of the electorate."

"So, without your potholes it would be impossible for anyone to run for re-election?"

"Exactly."

Nudity Soul Decision

The following is an article by ANN-MARGRET, substituting for vacationing Sheilah Graham.

By ANN-MARGRET

Virtually every actress today, and many actors as well, have to face up to an important decision — to be or not to be nude on the screen. I had to make that decision just recently when I was asked by Stanley Kramer to do a nude scene with Anthony Quinn in the picture we were making together, R.P.M.

I had never done a nude scene before and had to search my soul. I'm from Sweden and don't you believe that it's all like those Swedish pictures make it out to be. Those pictures give Stockholm an image as a haven for free love, but they don't show the other side of life, the moral side.

Besides, I've never been convinced that nudity is sexy. A nude man isn't sexy to me. But a man with an open shirt and tight pants turns me on.

Kramer who is the director-producer assured me that it would be done in good taste, and I had to agree that it did fit into the context of the story and wasn't being dragged in to be salacious or pornographic. I play a college student who is having an affair with a professor — that's Quinn — who eventually is made the head of the university.

Even so, I was not convinced, so we compromised. In our bed scene together, I remained under the covers and nudity was merely suggested by a bare leg or arm. In another scene where I was originally supposed to walk around a room nude, I wore a peek-a-boo negligee, which to me is much more exciting than exposing the entire body.

I don't know what I would have done if Kramer had insisted. I have a great respect for him and his manner of directing. He is one of the nicest and most sensitive men I've ever worked with and he really is a great choreographer as well. Remember the scene in The Secret of Santa Vittoria where the people of the town were hiding a million wine bottles? That scene was staged like an elaborate ballet.

And in R.M.P. he didn't stage the campus riot scenes, he choreographed them. They were frightening and not at all like my college days, but they were brilliant as well.

It's difficult for me to realize that this is my first American film in over two years, and really my best acting role since Bye, Bye Birdie. In between, I made some 15 pictures, most of them not very good. They were bad scripts.

I know we cheated the public. But I didn't know any better, I had contracts to fulfill and was told I had to do them.

I went to Italy and made three pictures there. That, too, turned out to be not the wisest thing. They were making nude pictures there. They called it realism. But I wouldn't go for it. I made them get stand-ins for me.

After Roger (Smith) and I were married, he took over the management of my career, together with his friend Allan Carr. They turned down a dozen picture offers during these past two years because they said the scripts were just trash. They insisted on waiting until a good one came along, and although I got restless at times — and, I must admit, I did have a few arguments with them because I like to work — they were right.

I'm happy I waited for R.P.M. I think it will open up a whole new career for me, not as Ann-Margret, glamor girl and sex symbol (I've never considered myself to be either), but as Ann-Margret, actress.

Four Keep Their Masks

EDMONTON—Four students left the public gallery of the Alberta legislature Friday rather than remove the gas masks they were wearing.

They left after a commissionaire requested they remove the masks which they were wearing while sitting quietly in the gallery.

They sat for 30 minutes relatively unnoticed by MLAs before Bill Dickie (PC — Calgary-Glenmore) asked government supporters to "kindly improve their arguments because visitors in the gallery are forced to wear masks."

The commissionare made the request soon after.

In an interview the four students emphasized they were not protesting the "pollution inside the legislature, it was the pollution outside" they were concerned with.

Alberta ombudsman George McLellan has lashed out at the city of Edmonton for failing to "either accept or defend its actions" in a land exchange.

McLellan, a former RCMP commissioner, in his report to the Alberta legislature, said an 80-year-old woman had complained to him about the way she was treated when she exchanged some of her land with the city more than 10 years ago.

McLellan said he could take no action because his authority does not extend into municipal government.

The woman, Mrs. Bertha Boyko, said the city had traded her for land sought by the Edmonton Separate School Board but she had received land she considered much less valuable.

She has sought a settlement of her grievance for 10 years but "everyone says they can do nothing to the city."

McLellan criticized the city for refusing to "either accept the criticism or defend its actions where the public can see it done."

In Regina the leader of the opposition has criticized the Saskatchewan governmeht for failing to correct "the critical cash situation facing farmers and the disappearance of job opportunities."

Woodrow Lloyd, leader of the New Democratic Party, says farm cash income in Saskatchewan in 1969 fell 20 per cent from the 1968 level and unemployment rose despite a government promise of more jobs.

He said federal and Saskatchewan Liberal governments had forced farmers off the lands and had encouraged unemployment. "They may pillow fight in public but they are under the same sheet when it comes to ideas," he claims.

Most of Saskatchewan farmers have been making steady payments on their Farm Credit Corp. loans despite the present grain situation, says a corporation spokesman in Regina.

Jack Cardiff, assistant administrative manager of the Saskatchewan division, said that of the four western provinces, Saskatchewan had the lowest percentage of accounts in arrears at the end of last year.

He said 14.5 per cent of all loans were in arrears at the beginning of this month — 2,873 out of 19,844. Of the accounts in arrears, 129 had been that way for more than a year and three were in arrears for more than three years.

Cardiff said corporation officials were happy with the farmers' attitude toward repayment during a difficult period.

Governor-General Roland Michener will visit Moose Jaw May 3.

Resident trainees in pediatrics or pediatric sub-specialties at Winnipeg Children's Hospital have embarked on a health care program for the poor.

Dr. Percy Barsky, director of the hospital's home-care department, said 10 resident trainees are involved in the program.

Each resident has been assigned to two families and is responsible for all aspects of medical attention required by them. About 150 children under the age of 16 are involved.

"We have another 80 families on file right now and hope that eventually several hundred poverty-stricken families will be involved," Dr. Barsky said.

He said the program is designed to do two things: provide comprehensive preventive and acute medical care on a personal basis, and serve in bringing the human aspect into post-graduate specialty training for physicians.

Daily Colonist Magazine

VICTORIA, B.C., SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1970

St. Ann's Catholic Church at Tzouhalem. –Colin Jackson photo.

By JAMES K. NESBITT

I noted last week that Col. D. Streamer's real name was Harry Graham, and I said I would search The Colonist to see if I could see his name, and the names of his two buddies, whom he mentioned as merely the private secretary and the comptroller.

Sure enough I found the names in The Colonist — Capt. Graham, aide-de-camp, A. S.

The memoirs of one, signing himself Col. D. Streamer, have been quoted in last week's article of early days in Victoria. The memoirs with the travels to Victoria and the Yukon of the Governor-General of Canada and the Countess of Minto. That was in 1900. Col. Streamer wrote amusingly and penetratingly, and he certainly sized up Victoria and Victorians.

VICTORIA'S SCHOOL CHILDREN IMPRESSED VICE-REGAL COUPLE

Slade, private secretary and Arthur Guise, comptroller of the vice-regal household. These were the three gay blades you may recall, who came from Oak Bay to town, by street car, complaining bitterly about the slow service, and who went to the Savoy Theatre, and didn't think much of the flirty, bold ladies on the stage—or so wrote Col. D. Streamer.

The governor-general and Lady Minto reached Victoria Aug. 1, 1900, in HMS Warspite, which brought them from Vancouver.

They found Victoria in mourning, for that day news was received of a Royal death.

The Colonist said: "With flags drooping disconsolately from hundreds of flag poles, and the unfinished condition of the work of decoration which was in progress, His Excellency, the governor-general, the Earl of Minto, Lady Minto and suite arrived in Victoria.

"The distinguished party was met at the Outer Wharf, by Lieutenant-Governor Sir Henri Joly de Lotbiniere and His Worship, Mayor Charles Hayward.

"The tidings, which turned, in an instant, Victoria's demeanor from one of gay expectancy to sombre mourning, reached the city in a brief message making the announcement of the death of the Duke of Edinburgh, second son of Her Beloved Majesty Queen Victoria.

"His Excellency was plainly quite affected by the grievous news which had just reached him.

"After quickly disembarking from the Warspite, the party boarded the Dominion government steamer Quadra, Capt. Walbran, and came around to Victoria.

"The little crowd which had assembled on the customs wharf in the Inner Harbor were respectfully silent as the governor-general and the party disembarked. A splendid equipage, drawn by four white horses, was in waiting.

"Lord and Lady Minto are staying at the residence leased for the occasion from Capt. Clive Phillips-Wolley, the others in the party being quartered at the Mount Baker Hotel."

The Phillips-Wolley residence was in Clive Drive, for years the home of the late Dr. and Mrs. Hermann Robertson. (It was recently demolished.)

After a few days in restful mourning in the quiet of the Oak Bay seaside, Their Excellencies sailed away in the Quadra for a visit to the Yukon.

The Colonist said: "Owing to the lack of sufficient accommodation on board Quadra two of the vice-regal children, some of the servants and Sgt. Rogers will not make the trip, but will remain in Victoria.

"Lord Minto, during his brief stay here, was entertained at dinner at the Union Club.

"His Excellency and Lady Minto express themselves charmed with Victoria, and look forward to their return visit here in about a month's time."

The Mintos certainly kept their children under wraps. Their names were not mentioned in the newpapers. Where they stayed was not mentioned—probably the Mount Baker Hotel.

Lieutenant-Governor Sir Henri Joly greatly impressed Col. D. Streamer, who wrote: "British Columbia possesses probably the most charming and courteous lieutenant-governor of any province in the Dominion, and she does well to be proud of her possession in this regard.

"A seigneur of the old school, amiable to a fault, with an unparalleled charm of manner, and a courtly Old World grace, which wins all hearts.

"Sir Henri Joly possesses in a marked degree that 'joi de vivre,' that enthusiasm of existence which conduces to happiness, and by his endeavors makes others happy.

"He has won for himself a glorious measure of the happiness which he so thoroughly deserves.

"His Honor is still as young as he was some 30 years ago, and by the example of his marvelous energy may yet rouse from its overwhelming lethargy the population of British Columbia whose good fortune it is to be ruled by so popular a governor."

Col. D. Streamer wrote a lively account of the Minto visit to Dawson and I hope to quote excerpts from it shortly.

The Minto party returned to Victoria Sept. 1. Mourning for the Duke of Edinburgh was over, and so Victoria put on its best bib and tucker and indulged in the works, for no place was more loyal to the knighted representative of Queen Victoria, after whom this proud city was named.

The Colonist went into rhapsodies: "Victoria lived up to her reputation in the manner in which she received His Excellency the Governor-General and the Countess of Minto on their return from the north.

"The September evening was a perfect one, and great crowds turned out to welcome the party all along the route from the City Hall, where Mayor Charles Hayward did the honors, to the Drill Hall. The armory was packed to suffocation."

Col. D. Streamer viewed the Drill Hall reception this way: "Addresses are presented — a large orchestra and chorus of picked vocalists gave renderings (simultaneously) of The Maple Leaf Forever, and The Red, White and Blue, and a large lady, with a still, small voice sang Flowers of the Forest with great feeling; in fact, the comptroller says that she seems to be FEELING for the right notes all the time, an accusation which is as unjust as it is libelous."

I searched The Colonist and could find no mention of a lady singing The Flowers of the Forest. I wonder who she was, or is?

After the Drill Hall reception, the Minto party "made its way to Beacon Hill Park, where a splendid display of fireworks was witnessed, Lord and Lady Minto afterwards going through the main streets to Oak Bay, where they are staying at the Mount Baker Hotel. His Excellency and the Countess were seated in a handsome equipage, drawn by four white horses, and they made an imposing sight." (Would anybody have a picture of this?)

The Colonist said: "In the growing darkness, Government Street, with its wealth of incandescent lamps, presented a most beautiful appearance.

"At the corner of Yates and Government Streets an elaborate arch of flowers, shrubbery and flags had been erected, bearing the words 'God Save the Queen' and 'Welcome.' "

There was a vice-regal "at home" in the legislative chamber of the legislative buildings:

"Perhaps the most impressive social function which has ever taken place in the history of British Columbia was that made memorable on the occasion of the public full-dress reception held by His Excellency and Lady Minto . . .

"The attendance was hardly as large as had been anticipated, perhaps owing to a misconception of what the term 'full dress' implied.

"It was, however, a thoroughly representative gathering that passed through the lines of the guard of honor.

"This imposing guard, of which Victorians should be justly proud, was composed of detachments of the Royal Engineers, the Royal Artillery and the Fifth Regiment."

Col. D. Streamer had an explanation for the crowd being not as large as anticipated: "The function is a distinct success, although the number of attendants is comparatively small.

"This can be accounted for by the fact that many of the inhabitants of Victoria are unable to summon up sufficient energy to make up their minds as to whether they will go, or not, and the time flies by before they have come to any firm final conclusion. Then it is too late."

That colonel certainly took it out on Victorians for being such slow-pokes. However, Victorians evidently took pride in the fact they were, and actually boasted about it.

The Colonist gave further details: "A considerable crowd had assembled outside the main entrance of the Buildings, which were brilliantly illuminated.

"Inside, the scene was one of splendor. Handsomely gowned ladies, escorted by gentlemen clad in the regulation dress suits mingled with the officers from the numerous branches of Her Majesty's services, wearing their brilliant dress uniforms.

"After the formal presentation ceremonies had been concluded, His Excellency and the Countess went from group to group and chatted pleasantly with all.

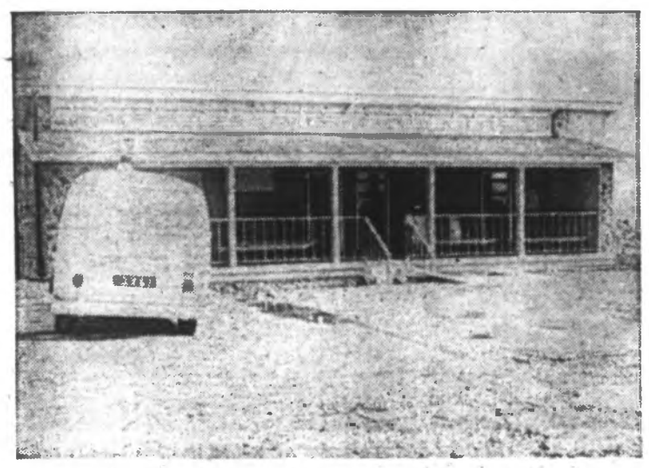

"The supper arrangements were perfect, and were under the care of Mrs. Clay and her assistant, Mr. John Jones."

Lieutenant-Governor Sir Henri Joly seems not to have given a dinner for the Mintos. He was living at the time in the temporary Government House, now the Spencer mansion of the Art Gallery.

Cary Castle, the Government House of those years, had burned down the year before. It was on the same site as the existing Government House.

Their Excellencies gave a dinner at the Mount Baker Hotel, to which were invited the lieutenant-governor, Premier James Dunsmuir, Mrs. Dunsmuir and Miss Dunsmuir; Col. E. G.

AMBULANCE AND DISPENSARY AT DENNERY.

INTERIOR OF WARD IN WEST INDIES HOSPITAL.

Up-Island Doctors Adopt Village Of Dennery on St. Lucia Island

They didn't adopt an island, just the village of Dennery with its 18-bed hospital, and the three or four clinics in this rural district of St. Lucia in the West Indies. Dr. Philip Power and Dr. John Fairley, of Comox, first noted the "Help Wanted" in the publication news of the Canadian Medical Association Journal, Sept. 28, 1968 edition, and brought it to the attention of the Courtenay - Comox - Cumberland - Campbell River area doctors.

By VIDA WELLWOOD

The CMA was attempting to organize a pool of volunteer Canadian doctors of all professional qualifications who were prepared to contribute two months of their time and their skill, without remuneration, to be posted on reasonable notice where and when their services were required. The Canadian Executive Medical Overseas would provide return economy air fare for the doctor and his wife for two-month assignments; for the doctor only, if the period of service should be less. The ministry of health of the recipient country would define its needs, and undertake to provide accommodation, maintenance and internal support.

So began the correspondence between Dr. Power, of Comox, and the administrator, Caribbean Medical Plan, Dr. A. D. Kelly, of Toronto, Ontario.

In the beginning, there was a group of 10 general practitioners in the Courtenay-Comox areas, plus one medical health officer, who were interested in volunteering for work as outlined in the Caribbean area. This list has grown to 15 local doctors, with a scheduled sequence carrying through to February, 1971.

A project of this kind required careful organization and administration. It was appreciated that a considerable financial sacrifice was involved, that frustrations and shortages might be encountered. But the need was great in certain outlying islands, and the help of Canadian doctors was gratefully received. The participants had the personal satisfaction of contributing substantially to a worthy cause, and of learning some features of health in the tropics which were unfamiliar.

Dr. D. M. Miller, his wife, June, and two of their children, Robert, 15, and Terrance, 10, left Comox Jan. 31, 1969, and arrived at Vigie Field Feb. 2. As the pioneers of the project they kept a tight schedule of work, travel and observation, writing home and their colleagues a detailed account of life in the Windward Islands. These letters were informative, often humorous, advising of the pitfalls of tropical life.

They found Dennery a beautiful spot, a typical West Indies fishing village. The beach is rather rocky and exposed to the Atlantic surf. Social life is "about nil," but drives to other centres are possible, the people friendly and appreciative.

The Millers were able to see a good deal of the island because at first they were supplied with a Land Rover, and later a Hillman. The day they got the Hillman the headlight rim fell off on the way home. Next they lost a hub cap. The following day it was a flat tire, and then on a Sunday outing to Vieux Fort, Souffriere, and Castries, the exhaust pipe fell off, necessitating an hour's stop to get it welded back on.

The Millers were appreciative of having transportation, and they saw many beautiful trees and shrubs, banana, coconut, coffee, grapefruit, limes.

Driving was an adventure, steep hills, sharp curves, narrow road, plus the challenge of a different gear shift and remembering to drive on the left.

The hospital at Dennery is a tidy little unit with 18 beds. The staff includes two locally trained nurses and ward aides, plus the matron, Miss James, and the dispenser, Mr. Alexander. The Canadian doctors found that worm medicine, vitamins, and tetracycline were tops on the hit parade, and there was a shortage of tongue depressors in the supply area.

Lab results were slow in coming, so it was helpful to have a book on parasite recognition and identification.

A 1968 survey showed that up to 90 per cent of the school children were infected with hookworm, 74 per cent with bilharzia (found in the encyclopedia under Blood Fluke) and 70 per cent thread worms.

Nurses at the hospital do all the maternity deliveries, as well as suturing cuts, and sometimes dispensing drugs. They are efficient, and leave the doctor free to see the 50-70 people a day at the clinics.

The first morning that any of the Canadian doctors are in residence, Etheline puts in an appearance as the doctor's wife's maid. She is a big, jolly, middle-aged woman, quite ready to help the newcomers get settled, and to show them "the ropes" of island living. She introduces them to barracuda and dolphin steak, also plantain, yam, soursap, breadfruit. Before long, the doctor's wife will be saying: "My Etheline is a real gem. Her cooking is excellent, she's a real thrifty shopper at the local fish market, an A-1 scrounger, and gets my laundry gleaming white."

There is a special art to doing the wash in Dennery. It takes hours for the women to scrub the clothes clean in a nearby stream, and lay them on the ground to dry, but the result is good.

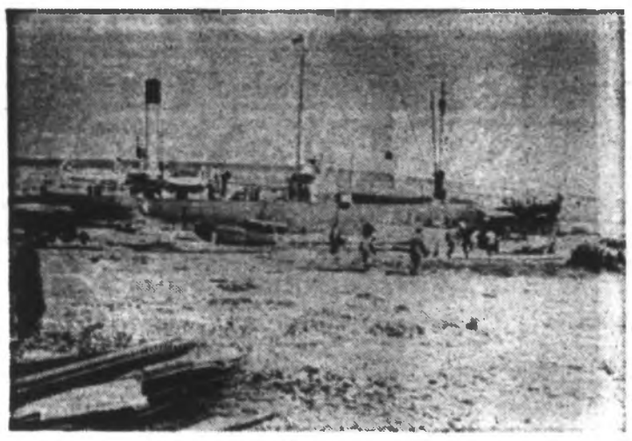

The wives of the doctors soon found the climate too hot for nylon stockings. They wore sandals, and dressed in light cotton shifts.

The houses and the hospital sit on a high hill overlooking the beautiful shore beyond. The residence is large, the kitchen has a new propane stove, dishes, silverware and tea towels provided, a new refrigerator, a large living and dining room, three bedrooms. The many windows have no curtains, there are comfortable chairs on the sundeck, the temperature is hot in summer, very hot when the breeze fails as it sometimes does.

The 1968 Planned Parenthood bulletin states that more than 2,500 children yearly are unable to attend school due to the shortage of school places. Often there are 270 to a classroom, divided into groups with seven teachers. The UNICEF vehicles and personnel work along with the Ministry of Health and Education.

Following the Millers, Dr. Dennis Coleman spent the month of April at Dennery. Dr. and Mrs. John Fairley and their two children wondered if the airline strike would delay their departure for May and June, but they managed to make it safely. The tempo was picking up, Dr. Fairley

BAYCHIMO AT HERSCHEL.

ARCTIC SETTLEMENT AT HERSCHEL.

ON HISTORIC TRIP TO WESTERN ARCTIC

Baychimo Beat Polar Pack

By DON MITCHELL
Retired D.O.T. radio inspector, former radio officer Ss. Baychimo

In failing light and snow-laden wind plucky Arctic pioneer reached dreaded wall of ice that had crushed many ships

It was a lovely day on July 8, 1925, when the Hudson's Bay Company's steamship Baychimo steamed out of Vancouver harbor for the north, and little did we realize what adventures lay ahead of us in the weeks ahead.

The ship had spend the past eight months at anchor off the North Shore during which time Captain Cornwell, and deck officers Coe, Summers, and Jackson, and engineers Black, Topping, and Winscombe had made many friends. There being no need for communications while in port, I had left the ship in October, 1924, but had been reassigned and rejoined her on June 10, 1925, a few weeks previous to sailing.

As explained in my previous article in The Islander the Company's vessel Lady Kinderaley had been caught in the ice the previous year, and as a result the Company's trading posts has received only a limited amount of supplies shipped down the Mackenzie River, and some had received none; the vessel was therefore really fully loaded with supplies of all kinds with oil and gas drums, cases, crates, canoes, boats, launches, in addition to two large scows, for ferrying cargo ashore. A trip along the decks was quite an experience, and in rough weather even hazardous.

We also had a full quota of passengers for our limited accommodation including several well known HBC men, Stevenson, Paddy Gibson, Ginger Johnson and Jock Livingstone. We also carried a trapper named Jacobsen with his two children Ted, aged 11, and Bessie, 9. These two youngsters seemed quite happy to be returning to the Arctic where they were born.

They had spent two years in Vancouver amid the amenities of civilization.

After leaving Vancouver harbor we anchored in English Bay, where we took on board dynamite, with which to blow up ice should the ship become jammed. With the explosives safely tucked away, we hove anchor and proceeeded on our way via the Inside Passage.

Our first port of call was Dutch Harbor, Unalaska, where we arrived July 17, after a fairly good, run, marred only by occasional fogbanks; also by some anxiety over little Bessie Jacobsen, who for a few days seemed very ill, but finally recovered from whatever it was, and became her normal mischievous self.

As I had notified our time of arrival through Dutch Harbor Radio (NPR) our bunker coal was ready for us and loading commenced right away. Many U.S. Coastguard men came to visit us, and I had some interesting years with radiomen from NPR, and the cutter Algonquin.

Dutch Harbor is quite a pretty place—when it isn't raining—and the country is covered with thick green grass. In the afternoon Jimmy Winscombe, Algy Jackson and I, climbed a hill, over 1,000 feet high from which we had a gorgeous view of many bays and inlets, and the snow-capped peaks of Alaska.

In the evening there was a big dance attended by scores of U.S. gobs and Aleutian belles, at which everyone seemed to be having fun, but the hall was simply crowded and the atmosphere a bit too smoggy for us. So we just kibitized for a little while, then returned to our ship, after a good piece of pie at a local estaminet.

We left Dutch Harbor at 3 p.m. on the 18th bound for Teller, Alaska.

En route I exchanged signals with our old friend the U.S. Cutter Bear, who gave us the latest dope on ice conditions, and information on charts of the Arctic.

Once Baychimo passed Port Barrow radio communication became very difficult, due to the fact that there were no radio stations on the north coast, and as there was almost no darkness at this time of the year, the range of my equipment was very limited. The success of my keeping contact depended to a great extent on being able to obtain relays by other ships, and in this I was greatly assisted by the USS Bear and the vessels Charles Brower and Oduna.

On July 22 we rounded Cape Prince of Wales, with the two Diomede Islands on our port side. One of these Islands is the most westerly part of North America, and the other the most easterly part of Siberia, where east and west meet. Shortly afterward we anchored in Clarence Sound, a couple of miles from Teller.

Here it had been arranged for us to take on board reindeer meat and dried fish, dog feed for the HBC posts, but due to strong wind and heavy seas we could not load right away. Next morning our supplies arrived alongside, although the sea was still pretty rough. It was tough work transferring the stuff from the scow to the ship, but all hands were on the job, including me, and with waves breaking over us we were all soaked to the skin.

We left Teller at 4 a.m. on the 24th, and not meeting any ice, we arrived at and anchored off Point Barrow at 4 p.m. on the 26th. There was very little ice around as during the past few days the mainpack had been carried away by strong southwest winds.

Quite a lot of natives and others came aboard to visit, and among them was a chap named Alec Smith, prospecting for oil, and it was rumored that he claimed to have found extensive oilfields—this in the year 1925.

Here we engaged six natives to make the voyage with us and work cargo. We left Point Barrow at 8 p.m. and shortly afterward began to encounter icefloes.

For the next four days we steamed along the northern coast of Alaska and Canada at various speeds dependent on ice conditions, for at times the floes were so thick as to make our progress very slow.

In addition the charts of this area were most unreliable due partly to the fact that when the icepack grounds in winter it pushes up the sea bottom thereby creating new shoals each year.

As we had no echo sounder or other modern equipment we had to rely on soundings taken by seamen heaving the lead. Our most proficient hand at this was a fine ex-Royal Navy seaman, Jack Conroy, of North Vancouver. Despite this however some of the humps in the seabottom rise so abruptly that we ran aground three times, in this section, and on one occasion we were stuck so fast that we had to unload the two scows and part of the deck cargo before floating clear.

Fortunately we did no serious damage, though we dented one of the bow plates quite badly, but without causing any leak. After these small misadventures we arrived at Herschell Island at 10 p.m. on July 30.

Herschel Island is about 10 miles long by five miles wide, and is separated from the Canadian mainland by a mile or so of shoal.

There was at this time a good sized HBC trading Post—Mr. West the manager — there was also an RCMP establishment under the command of Insp. Caulkin.

The Anglican Church had been active here for some time, and indeed up to 1925 was the only church working among the Eskimos of this area. Present at this time were Bishop Lucas, and two other clergymen, a Mr. Webster, and one whose name I have forgotten. The natives are friendly cheerful people and spend the winters hunting and trapping, but come to the settlement in summer, where they live in shacks made of old packing cases and anything on which they can lay their hands.

There were also a number of white trappers—some with Eskimo wives and families—who had their own powerboats and came to Herschel in summer to sell their furs and take in supplies for the winter.

The island, in summertime, has a thick covering of grass and wild flowers. This may seem strange so far north, but remember that the sun shines day and night for two months, as contrasted with winter when it disappears for about the same length of time.

Jimmy Winscombe and I took a walk to the cemetery and had a look at the graves of some of the whalers who came up here years ago; There were many deaths around the year 1894, mostly young men, English and Scandinavians.

On Sunday morning Bishop Lucas held a service at the mission, attended by many natives and white men. I was unable to go as I had radio business to attend.

During our stay at Herschel the American trading schooner Nanook arrived. Its messboy had hanged himself, for some unknown reason, and after an inquest his remains were given an Anglican burial service at local Mission.

We stayed five days at Herschel, first unloading the cargo for delivery there, then taking on goods and belongings of others who would be setting up their winter camps for their traplines.

More passengers came on board, who would have to sleep on settees or anywhere else that we could put them. Among these were Messrs. Brabant and Conn, two high ranking men of the HBC's fur trade. Also a fine young RCMP constable named Millen, who sad to say was killed a few years later in the Yukon by the notorious "mad trapper" who fought a gun battle with the police.

We now had about 30 husky dogs on deck, and the noise they made when they all howled together was blood-curdling. As some of them were just outside my radio cabin it did not help me when trying to read weak signals on my receiver, but such were the trials of pioneer radio.

On Aug. 5 we left Herschel and a few hours later arrived at Shingle Point, off the mouth of the Mackenzie River delta. Here more natives came off to see the "big ships." They were clean healthy chaps and all insisted on shaking hands. They expressed surprise as to how a steel ship could stay afloat, and it was not easy to explain it to them.

Here we were joined by Major Burwash—a famous Canadian Arctic personality—who would travel with us as far east as possible, after which he would go overland to Labrador studying the condition of the natives.

Three days were spent unloading cargo at Shingle Point, during which I spent most of my nights clearing radio traffic and did not get up till around 10 a.m. We left there early in the morning on the 8th and at 3 p.m. on the 9th arrived at Baillie Island where we immediately commenced discharging cargo, and where Bishop Lucas and Mr. Webster went ashore to hold divine service. Here I spoke with a native trapper who got 400 white fox skins last year, which at $30 per skin is pretty good?

We spent three days unloading at Baillie Island, and here young Dube and Ginger Johnson left us to take charge of the post.

On Aug. 10, the trading schooner Maid of Orleans, Captain Klinkenberg, arrived from Coronation Gulf. Klinkenberg was under suspicion due to the disappearance of an RCMP constable from his ship last year.

We left Baillie Island at 5 p.m. Aug. 11 and at 4 a.m. the next morning we landed a chap named Graubiline, with supplies for a year, at Cape Perry; just a dreary, barren rocky coast where he would stay for a year and run his traplines.

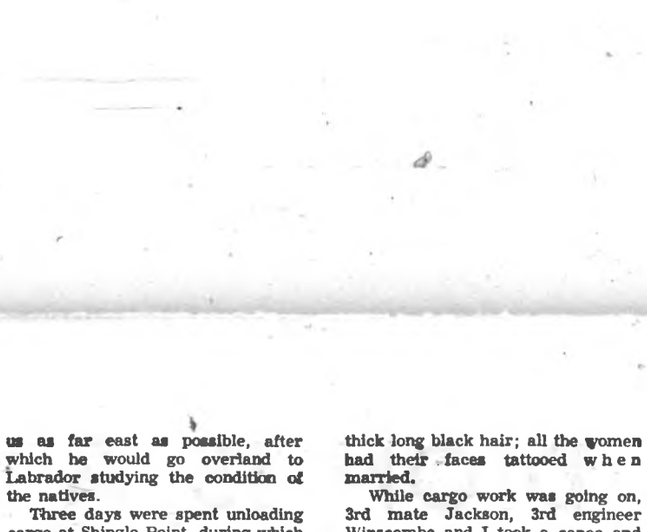

Our next call was Bernard Harbor where we anchored about ½ mile from the settlement. Here there is a good enclosed anchorage and a good post where there were two white women, the manager's wife and wife of the Anglican priest. Cargo unloading here was completed by 4 p.m. on the 14th after which we left and entered Coronation Gulf.

Baychimo was the first steamship, and up to 1925 the largest vessel, to enter these waters. The Gulf is dotted with many islands, most of which have a peculiar formation, being low at the west and rising at the east to a high cliff facing eastward.

Early morning on Aug. 15 we arrived at Tree River, where there was a fine anchorage and the nicest HBC Post we had seen this voyage. The Eskimos at this time had no missionaries among them, but shortly after our visit a mission was set up here by Mr. Webster. Murder was not infrequent among them, which explains the reason for a police establishment with a sergeant and two constables. The natives were clean, self-reliant people with thick long black hair; all the women had their faces tattooed when married.

While cargo work was going on, 3rd mate Jackson, 3rd engineer Winscombe and I took a canoe and paddled a few miles up the river. It was something of a thrill to feel that very few white men had been on this river since Samuel Hearne, more than 100 years before, and we were following such men as him, and Dease and Simpson.

While at Tree River natives came aboard offering fur clothes and sealskin boots, and we all exchanged with them for tobacco and old shirts. Here we also picked up several more passengers, including a police constable and a young Eskimo prisoner and his two wives, Illoongwa and Akangwa. This prisoner was being taken to Herschel Island for trial, for the murder of the HBC post manager and a policeman.

ROUTE OF BAYCHIMO.

On the 17th we left Tree River for Kent Peninsula where we arrived after about 12 hours' steaming. Here we discharged more cargo and also put the motor vessel Kugyuk in the water. This little vessel we had brought from Vancouver, and she would be used by the company for trading in this area. It was a beautiful day and cargo working went along very well.

We left Kent Peninsula at 1 a.m. on Aug. 19 and proceeded through Dease Strait to Cambridge Bay, Victoria Land, the most easterly point of our voyage.

We arrived and anchored a few miles from the post at 8 p.m., but our anchorage was very exposed and a violent gale blowing gave us an uncomfortable night, during which the ship was turned round a couple of times and the anchor chains twisted.

The post here is what is called an Outpost where goods are landed to be drawn on by other posts that may run short. It was in the care of a native and his family.

Here we also landed Major Burwash and several tons of equipment for his trek across to Labrador. The major was a trifle officious in manner, and had not particularly endeared himself during his stay aboard.

After much trouble in clearing our anchor chains, we left Cambridge Bay about 11 a.m. Aug. 23, but shortly after leaving we ran aground on a hard bottom with a shock that shook the whole vessel. We got off without much trouble and were pleasantly surprised to learn that despite the severity of the grounding we were not taking in any water, so apparently were O.K

We were now heading westward on the return part of our route, and on the 24th we called at Tree River and Bernard Harbor again, where we picked up more furs that had come in.

On the 25th we landed Jacobsen and his family, with lumber, coal, food supplies, clothes, sleds, dogs and other gear at a place called Inman River, on the barren, rocky south coast of Dolphin and Union Strait. Here they would live and trap until the arrival of the Baychimo next year, amid several weeks of total darkness, and months of very low temperatures. The Arctic trapper has to be a hardy character.

While on watch at night I heard Fanny's pup making an awful noise (Fanny was a big female husky) and going out to investigate I found the pup had fallen down and was jammed between some cases on deck, so I shifted them and lifted him out, whereon Fanny came to me barking and pushed her nose against me, just as though she wanted to say thanks.

For several days past I had been without radio contact with the outside, but at 3 a.m. on the 26th I made contact with USS Bear 1,300 miles distant, in Golofwin Bay, so now our folks would know that we were all OK.

At 3 p.m. on the same day we arrived off Fort Brabant, in Prince Albert Sound. This post had been established in 1923, but as the Lady Kindersley had not got through in 1924, Mr. Miller, the post manager had not seen a white man for two years. He sure was glad to see us all, and so were his natives who had bedecked themselves in their most colorful outfits for our benefit.

I might mention that during the voyage I had, through necessity, developed some skill as a barber, and even Mr. Conn and Insp. Caulkin had submitted to my tonsorial treatment.

After leaving Fort Brabant we met a lot of ice, including some heavy stuff, but we reached Baillie Island at 3 a.m. on the 28th, and after picking up more furs continued on to Shingle Point. Here Brabant and Conn, Bishop Lucas, and several others left us to go down the Mackenzie River by boat. Just a short hop from Shingle Point and we reached Herschel Island, where we unloaded our scows and picked up more bales of fur.

During the past few weeks we had made good progress and found the waters east of Herschel remarkably clear of ice. The ship had covered more distance than any previous vessel in the short season of open navigation. With our business at Herschel completed, and a valuable cargo of furs on board, we were all optimistic for a quick passage home. Alas, as it turned out, we found we had another think coming.

At 2:30 p.m. on Sept. 1, after much tooting of the whistle, and with flags flying we steamed away from our anchorage at Herschel, homeward bound.

From the time we left the shelter of the sandspit, we had to buck our way through heavy ice. Worming in and out, dodging large pans, we got almost around the island, but on the northwest point heavy ice was packed tight right up to the shore and our progress completely blocked. Reluctantly we were forced to return to shelter under the lee of

. . . and a working man too

If Andre Dion were to stand in a crowd there are few people who would notice he was there. In height he is a little less than average, but only by a few inches; his hair is receding from his forehead, but just a little and where his head is balding on the top it is covered by the long, combed-over strands of very ordinary, slightly-curly dark brown hair.

By NEVILLE SHANKS

His nose is obviously Gallic, but not so large as to attract attention and behind his fairly heavy glasses his mild brown eyes peer peacefully.

If he should speak, one would hear a very mild voice made conspicuous only by its heavy French accent. It would soon be obvious that here was a very humble man. But only later would it be clear that his humility is not a state of fear, or doubt, or uncertainty but rather is backed by courage and resolution and, in its way, a very daring spirit.

Andre Dion is a Franciscan and, as far as is known, Canada's first priest-worker.

"It's not something that I decided suddenly," he said recently. "I thought about it, and prayed and meditated for many years. I could see, as others saw, that things were changing, that the church had to a large degree become separated from the people. If we were to accomplish our mission, we must get back among them.

"In a way, it was something like the problem faced by St. Francis of Assisi, the founder of our order, more than 600 years ago. He had to decide whether it should be monastic, with the friars living in isolation from the world, or out among the people carrying the message of Christian salvation. He decided to go to the people.

"What I am doing is trying to carry out these same principles."

Having made his decision, he had to determine where he should go to carry out the work he had chosen. Because at his ordination in Montreal in 1953 he had taken a vow of obedience to the order, he must get permission to leave the provincial house at Regina.

"There was no use going somewhere as an ordinary parish priest," he said. "I had been for four years assistant at a large French parish at Mallairdville, and after that two years as pastor at Alberni. This was not what I wanted to do.

"A priest in charge of a parish is an administrator, a man behind a desk that people come to. I didn't want them coming to me. I wanted to go to them, especially to those who would never think of coming to me.

"When you have a parish too much of your time is taken up running it. Certainly there is a lot of valuable work, and you can keep very busy, but usually the closest you come to your parishioners is on Sunday and then you have to keep asking them for money to keep yourself and the affairs of the parish going.

"I wanted to work with the people on their own level, eliminating the money problem, showing them that I, even though a priest, am the same kind of man as themselves."

Father Andre finally chose Vancouver Island, believing that here he could find a place small enough that he wouldn't be forced to do too much in the way of administration and where the people, too few to support a priest and a church in the manner of the larger centres, would be more likely to welcome his experiment.

Because the Island is in the Diocese of Victoria, he wrote to Bishop Remi De Roo, setting out what his intentions were and asking if a place could be found for him. He wrote in French, not wishing to take a chance on the possibility he might choose a wrong word, or perhaps not make his meaning completely clear, in English.

He came from a family of workers and manual work would, despite his years in administrative work, come relatively easily.

"My father was a truck driver," he said, "who insisted that all four of his sons go to college. Two of my brothers are engineers, and the other is a Jesuit priest.

"But during the summers I had to help out by working. I did all types of manual work, but mostly with electricians.

"After my ordination I was a teacher at a Montreal college for three years, then went to a similar position in Edmonton for two years. It was there I learned English. I didn't know any English before that.

"Then I went to Mallairdville and Alberni before I was called to the provincial house. The Franciscan province includes all of Western Canada. When I first went there it was in Cochrane, Alberta, but later it was moved to Regina.

"I was made superior of the house, and was in charge of the finances and the missions. Later, because we had a number of bulletins and other publications, I set up and ran a print shop. On the weekends I would go out to some of the neighboring parishes where a priest was wanted."

Father Andre had been appointed for two years, but at the end of that time he was asked to accept another term in order to smooth the way for new officials who had joined the house. He agreed, but still had a year to go when he made the decision to ask for a change.

Everything went smoothly, despite the revolutionary nature of his request. The bishop accepted his proposal almost at once, backed by the agreement of the diocesan council of priests.

To the members of the order it was something of a shock but they, too, agreed that what Father Andre proposed was entirely in keeping with the Franciscan rule and tradition.

ANDRE DION ". . . we must go back among the people."

"Father is not running away from anything," the custodial council of the provincial house wrote in giving its approval. "He wants to live the Franciscan life in its truest and fullest sense.

"Though there may have been some scepticism in beginning such an experimentation, the 14 years of faithful and conscientious service he has given qualifies him to be chosen to inaugurate the priest-worker experiment.

"It is a typically Franciscan apostolate to work amidst the people of the world.

"Even though this means a loss to the present structure, we have not lost a man," the council concluded. "In our humble way we have a Leger whose actions speak more strongly than words."

Leger is the Quebec cardinal who recently put aside his purple robes and high office to work among the lepers in Africa.

"Many people have heard of the priest-worker experiment in France," Father Andre said. "Mistakes were made there, but they have been overcome and now it is working well. The main fault was that the priests cut themselves off altogether from their bishops and the spiritual community. I won't be doing that.

"I'm in contact with the bishop all the time, and can see no posibility of weakening my vocation or lessening my determination to remain a Franciscan."

Five months ago he moved to Port Hardy. Most of his time has been spent repairing and painting his church, a surplus building moved some time ago from the nearby airport. A major job was providing running water for his living quarters at the rear of the church building.

It was his first opportunity to show what he could do with his hands and to display some of his ingenuity.

He installed a gutter along part of the building, and from it ran a downspout to a tank underneath it. Alongside the tank is an electric pump. As long as there is enough rain to keep the tank full he has running hot and cold water in his kitchen.

"There just wasn't enough money available to drill a well, so I had to do the next best thing," he said.

He already has a septic tank on the grounds and when he has time, with the help of his parishioners, will dig a hole for it and install the drain tile and then he can put in a toilet.

A month ago he went to work for Montgomery Electric in Port Hardy as an electrician's helper.

"Now I can meet people on their own level, as one of them," he said. "I don't want to be somebody apart, somebody in a position above them to be approached only formally, if at all.

Certainly I'm a priest, and always will be, but now I'm a working man, too, in contact all the time with working men, able to talk to them in their own language and to have them talk to me the same way.

"When I put on my vestments to celebrate mass on Sunday I won't have to pester anyone for more money, because now I'm able to keep myself. And they won't feel guilty about not being able to provide enough to keep me."

He paused for a moment, and his smile showed he was as close to a feeling of pride as a humble man can get.

"You know," he said, "the fellows on the job don't call me father anymore. They call me Andre."

CANADA'S BIGGEST CHESS BOOSTER IS VICTORIAN

By RAY KERR

Suddenly attention shifted to a frail but determined looking patriarch from the West, who had something important to say.

The rest is history, because what happened that summer morning of 1969, far away from Victoria, showed that a man's age has nothing to do with his performance.

The man was Daniel MacAdam, 85 years young, of 206-805 Cook Street, Victoria, and he was addressing Canadian Chess Federation delegates on behalf of his Project No. 1 — the Chess Foundation of Canada.

"It was a tremendously moving presentation," one of the delegates said later. "We were all convinced by Mr. MacAdam that this project is really worth supporting."

But that's the way things are with Daniel Alexander MacAdam, and that's the way he's performed practically since being born in St. Paul, Minn., on May 30, 1885.

He approaches everything with outstanding enthusiasm, and has that special talent of instilling this spirit in others associated with his projects.

The chess foundation undertaking is a simple one — it aims to raise enough capital so Canadian chess can be boosted by the accruing interest from it every year.

It may sound like a dream now, with only a few thousand dollars in the kitty, but when you consider there were only a few hundred four years ago, you realize what this grey-haired Victorian is capable of accomplishing.

During his stay in Montreal — and he made the trip on the foundation's behalf — he never stopped for a moment trying to boost the foundation's coffers.

This is how he works it: he has a special foundation book, which already sports a long list of donors. When he approaches a potential booster, he asks him if he'd like to have his signature in the book.

If the answer is affirmative, the "donor" then is asked how much he'd like to contribute to the foundation, with a detailed explanation of how it works and what it's trying to accomplish.

This direct approach seldom fails.

But then Daniel Alexander MacAdam has always preferred to take the bull by the horns.

After his family moved to New Brunswick at the turn of the century, Daniel MacAdam became an express messenger with the Canadian Pacific Railway, giving him an opportunity to do what he likes best — travel.

He spent more than 37 years with CPR, before retiring and eventually finding his niche in sunny Victoria.

His first brush with chess came through his brother-in-law Frank Lister, who taught him the fundamentals of the game in Fredericton.

But soon Daniel MacAdam became a driving force behind chess not only in the Maritimes, but in Canada as a whole.

Helped by his inexorably optimistic attitude, he collected money to send Canada's leading players — Abe Yanofsky of Winnipeg, Paul Vaitonis of Hamilton and Lionel Joyer of Montreal — to big tournaments abroad.

For eight years he served as vice-president of the Canadian Chess Federation, repeatedly declining nomination for the presidential post on the grounds the position should be held by someone more acquainted with the game than he was.

But as Yanofsky puts it, "his outstanding contribution to Canadian chess has been the establishment of a national chess magazine. In the fall of 1947, he started a Maritime Chess News Bulletin, of two or three mimeographed pages, at 50 cents a year," the Winnipeg chess ace recalls.

After a year or two, he adds, it became a mimeographed magazine of 10 to 16 stapled pages and was renamed Maritime Chess Chat. Later it became the accepted organ of Canadian chess, appropriately named Canadian Chess Chat.

"It grew from 45 to 60 pages, with covers, advertising section and front and other pictures printed blue-on-white," Yanofsky pointed out.

"MacAdam's optimistic thread of editing and writing throughout endowed it with a chummy, friendly atmosphere that caused it to be acclaimed as the most interesting of chess magazines.

"His unselfish devotion to the cause of chess is indeed difficult to match, anywhere in the world," Yanofsky praised.

Yanofsky later took over the Chess Chat, while Daniel MacAdam went on to other things.

Among those was a directory of chess players in Canada, a work of more than two years complete in 1961.

And about four years ago, he embarked on foundation work, which sees him flitting across the continent trying to enrich its bank balance.

At the same time, he finds time to promote the game in an active manner, particularly among Greater Victoria's senior citizens.

With this fantastic and varied chess background, Daniel MacAdam is in an excellent position to offer a few hints how to go about organizing a chess club.

Here are some of his pointers, which might prove invaluable to those contemplating organization of a club in the near future:

● ORGANIZATION — Three, four or five persons can start a club, with new members recruited by missionary work on the part of active membership.

Compile a list of prospective members and mail invitations to new prospects, giving place, date and time of the organizational meeting.

If possible, have a player of note address the meeting on the subject of benefits accruing to those who indulge in the game of chess.

● ORGANIZATIONAL MEETING — At the meeting, select a name for the club and elect officers; discuss a club constitution and appoint a committee to submit a draft. Determine which date will be most suitable for play to the largest number of those present, and pick time and place for the next meeting.

Consideration of a constitution can be both lively and entertaining, as well as important. Don't expect to get along without arguments. And the constitution is the backbone of a chess club.

● QUARTERS — If regular quarters cannot be secured at once, meetings may be held at the members' homes. This is a common practice, and affords more than just an agreeable social atmosphere.

It provides an opportunity for the "better half" to see and understand just what her husband is doing when he goes to a chess club meeting, and may get women interested in the game.

The existence of the Club d'Echecs de la Regence in Quebec City, consisting entirely of women, is an indication of the possibilities in this direction.

The local branch of the YMCA is often only too glad to provide space for club meetings, or to establish a "Y" chess club among the juniors.

Sometimes a town hall, city hall, company recreation room or a place of that sort is made available to the club. At times an enthusiast will provide a room as temporary quarters in his home.

● FINANCING — You may have parties, dances or concerts to raise finances for the club, but you will find most players inclined to independence on this point.

In addition to entrance fees and annual fees, you may introduce play and luncheon fees. Then there are tournament fees (from 25 cents up), trophy funds or other subscriptions to provide means. Choose what you please or what is most suitable to the majority.

● CHESS PROMOTION — To promote community interest in chess as well as in your club and its activities, make use of the local newspaper(s).

Have the secretary-treasurer submit reports of the club meetings, proposed events, tournaments, matches, lectures, etc., to the newspaper(s), thus developing a strong club backing.

Arrange for displays of chess sets, boards and literature and trophies in local store windows, especially bookstores and department stores.

THOUGHT FOR FOOD

Do-It-Yourself PIZZAS

In Mr. Webster's dictionary, "PIZZA" is defined as "a large flat tart made of bread dough spread with tomato pulp, strips of cheese and often shreds of meat, anchovies or the like, highly seasoned with savory herbs, and baked thoroughly." One cookbook describes pizza as "a robust food to go with a corresponding appetite." In Italy, where pizzerias (taverns specializing in pizzas) originated, different sections of the country have developed different kinds of this primitive pie. The true Roman pizza is made with onions and oil but no tomato, while the Neopolitan pizza is spread with tomatoes and Mozzarella cheese. Franciscan pizza has a garnish of mushrooms, ham, tomatoes and cheese. Others may be topped with mussels, black olives or anchovies.

The savory herbs used in pizzas are usually oregano or sweet basil and Parmesan or Mozzarella are the kinds of cheese used. The crust used can be made of the original bread dough or a dozen other variations . . . pastry or biscuit dough is popular here in this country. Perhaps the most popular version is made with biscuit mix with yeast added. This makes a crust a little less robust than a straight bread dough . . . a nice short-cut method producing a fine crispy base.

Typical variations for both crust and filling are limited only by your particular taste and your flair for creative cookery.

Our first pizza recipe is made with a biscuit mix crust, it is partially baked before a savory tomato sauce is spread over the crust then topped with cooked and crumbled sausage meat and cheese. Then back into the oven to finish baking.

GOOD AND PLENTY PIZZA . . . 2 cups biscuit mix, 2 Tbsp. prepared mustard and about ½ cup milk or enough to make a soft dough. Measure mix into a bowl. Stir the mustard into the milk, blend into mix. Knead one minute on board dusted with biscuit mix. Roll or pat to fit a 12-inch pizza pan. Prick surface with a fork. Bake in a preheated 425 deg. F. oven for 5-7 minutes. While crust bakes prepare the sauce. For this you will need 2 cans (7½-oz.) tomato sauce, 1 Tbsp. sugar, 1 Tbsp. dehydrated onion, 2 Tbsp. prepared mustard and ¼ tsp. oregano. Blend all these ingredients in a small saucepan and simmer for 10 minutes. Pour into partially baked pizza crust. Other ingredients needed . . . 1 pound bulk pork sausage meat, well cooked and well drained, 1 cup grated Cheddar cheese and 2 Tbsp. grated Parmesan cheese. Sprinkle the Cheddar cheese over the tomato sauce. Now crumble the cooked sausage meat over the cheese and top with the Parmesan cheese. Have the oven heat reduced to 375 deg. F. and return the pizza to the oven for 12 to 15 minutes or until cheese melts and crust is golden.

Then there's the pizza made with convenience items . . . this particular recipe calls for lean bits of flaked canned corned beef together with a can of pizza sauce, mozzarella cheese and Italian style bottled dressing with a crust made from a hot roll mix.

SHORT-CUT PIZZA . . . 1 package (13¾ ounces) hot roll mix, 1 can (7½ ozs.) pizza sauce, 1 can (12 ozs.) corned beef unchilled, ½ to 1 tsp. oregano, 2 packages (4 ozs. each) mozzarella cheese and bottled Italian style dressing. Prepare hot roll mix according to directions except use 1 cup water and do not allow to rise. Divide dough among 3 lightly greased 9-inch pie pans, patting and stretching it to cover bottom pans and form up-standing edge. Spread 2 Tbsp. pizza sauce on each of the 3 dough-filled pans. Flake corned beef with a fork. Dot pizza with meat. Sprinkle lightly with oregano, then cheese, then drizzle the remaining pizza sauce. Brush edges with Italian dressing. Bake in a pre-heated 450 deg. F. oven for about 45 minutes.

Sometimes pizza lovers like the "top your own" idea. It is a perfect way for party pizzas. The easy is quickly made with biscuit mix and covered with convenient canned tomato sauce for color and flavor. A choice of five toppings should please most tastes.

You can bake several pizzas just before serving and have extras rolled, topped with tomato sauce and ready to bake as needed. Have a generous supply of shredded mozzarella cheese, anchovies, mushrooms, shrimps, sliced olives, sliced pepperoni and other pizza toppings, fixed and ready for guests to put on their fresh baked slices of piping hot pizza.

TOP-YOUR-OWN-PIZZA . . . 1 can (7½ oz.) tomato sauce, 1 Tbsp. salad oil, ½ tsp. basil, ½ tsp. oregano, 2 cups biscuit mix, ½ cup water and assorted toppings . . . grated mozzarelli cheese, anchovies, chopped mushrooms, shrimp, sliced olives, sliced pepperoni, etc. Combine tomato sauce, oil, oregano and basil in a saucepan and simmer 3 minutes.

To make the crust . . . mix the biscuit mix and water. Knead on a lightly floured surface about 1 minute. Roll or pat into a circle ¼ inch thick and place on a baking sheet. Turn up edge all around so that the filling will be contained. Spread with the sauce mixture. Sprinkle with Parmesan cheese. Bake in a pre-heated 425 degree F. oven for about 15 minutes or until crust is golden brown. Serve hot with bowls of assorted toppings. This makes 1 larger pizza.

In case you would like to try the pizza crust made with yeast and biscuit mix, here is the recipe . . .

YEAST AND BISCUIT MIX PIZZA CRUST

. . . measure into a bowl ¾ cup sprinkle with 1 package dry (bulk dry yeast). Stir until dissol cups biscuit mix. Beat vigorous well floured surface and kn smooth. Roll or pat dough into one large circle or two small baking sheet and turn up edges

This is the basic recipe, fr filling may be used and the piz heated 425 degree F. oven for 2 until crust is nicely brown.

A pizza crust base is fine left over cooked chicken, turkey . . . melt a tablespoon of butter skillet, add ¼ cup chopped oni soft but not brown. Add 2 mushroom soup undiluted and turkey, chicken or left over roa 5 minutes then pour into a bake with grated cheese and place i cheese is melted and all is but tossed green salad. This dish h a leftover.

And of course there is t . . . you serve it like pizza, y wedges like pizza and it tas pie. For this we use a pastry sweet filling.

KITCHEN TRICKS . . .

If cookies get too crisp and break when removing them from the pan just slip the pan back in the oven for a few minutes and they will loosen easily.

A fine knitting needle is a great tool for loosening a cake baked in a tube pan.

Keep a large salt shaker filled with flour (preferably the new pouring-flour) in a handy place near the stove . . . use it for thickening sauces, gravy, etc.; for coating chicken or fish, for dusting cake pans, etc. The new pouring-flour can be shaken directly into hot liquid for thickening without lumping.

An ice cream scoop measures exactly ¼ cup shortening. Handy, too, to make a neat and equal serving of mashed potatoes.

DEAR FOLKS:

I have a friend who has what they call an inside kitchen with no window or outside door. It was very dark and dreary.

Now, I am no interior decorator and make no claims for knowledge in that field whatsoever. But I did hit upon the darlingest idea for her.

We bought an adorable big poster in color of a mountain scene. I thumbtacked this above her kitchen sink where the usual window is.

We then bought narrow rolls of white plastic ADHESIVE tape (like the tape usually applied to bandages) and one roll a bit wider.

We literally made a window frame around the poster to hide the thumbtacks. The narrow tape we used to make little squares to imitate window panes!

It actually looks as if one were looking out a window into the deep mountains and greenery.

You can buy any scene you desire. It certainly makes the kitchen look like an outside one now. It brightened it up and even makes it look larger.

THE COLD FACTS

DEAR HELOISE:

When my mother freezes things in freezer bags, she puts the bag in a milk carton and folds the top of the bag down over the edge of the carton. This keeps the bag open, and makes it easier to put whatever she is freezing into it.

When the bag is full she just pulls it out, closes it and puts the filled bag into her freezer. Sure keeps the food from spilling.

OFF THE RECORD

DEAR HELOISE:

Here is a hint for the fellow hi-fi bugs who have trouble with dusty records but do not have a record-dusting cloth:

. . . measure into a bowl ¾ cup warm water and sprinkle with 1 package dry yeast (or 1 Tbsp. bulk dry yeast). Stir until dissolved. Then add 2½ cups biscuit mix. Beat vigorously. Turn dough on well floured surface and knead lightly until smooth. Roll or pat dough into size you wish . . . one large circle or two smaller size. Place on baking sheet and turn up edges.

This is the basic recipe, from this point any filling may be used and the pizza baked in a pre-heated 425 degree F. oven for 20 to 25 minutes or until crust is nicely brown.

A pizza crust base is fine for a filling using left over cooked chicken, turkey or what have you . . . melt a tablespoon of butter or margarine in a skillet, add ¼ cup chopped onion and saute until soft but not brown. Add 2 tins cream of mushroom soup undiluted and 2 cups of chopped turkey, chicken or left over roast. Cook for about 5 minutes then pour into a baked pizza crust. Top with grated cheese and place in a hot oven until cheese is melted and all is bubbly. Serve with a tossed green salad. This dish has no earmarks of a leftover.

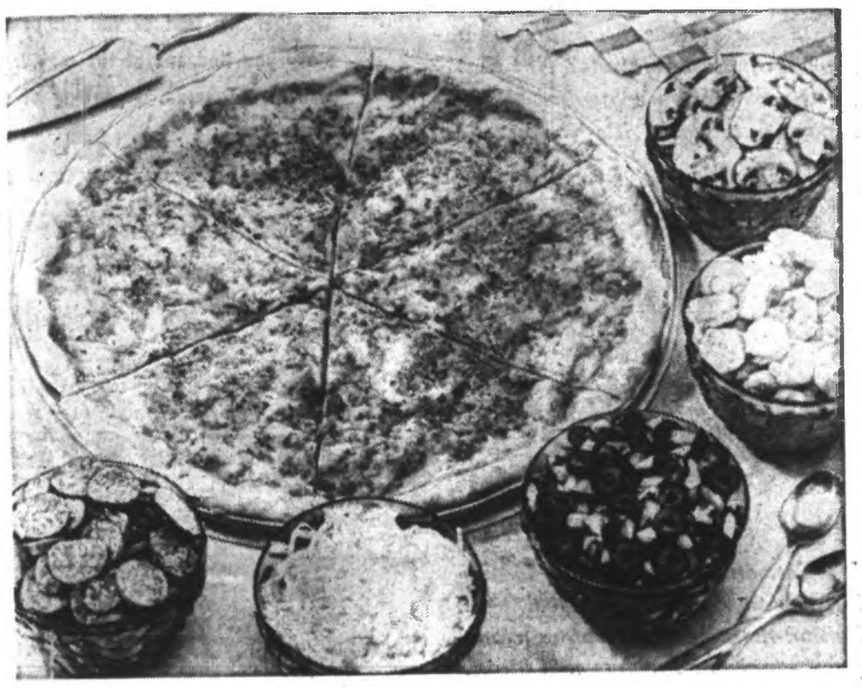

And of course there is the dessert pizza . . . you serve it like pizza, you eat it cut in wedges like pizza and it tastes like a party pie. For this we use a pastry pie crust and a sweet filling.

DESSERT PIZZA . . . enough pie crust dough for a two crust pie, 1 package Philadelphia cream cheese, ½ cup sugar, 2 eggs, 2 Tbsp. lemon juice and enough thick preserve or jam to cover surface of the pizza. Form the pastry dough into a ball, flatten to a circle about a third of an inch thickness. Fit it loosley into a 14-inch pizza pan. Flute the edge and prick well with a fork. Bake in a pre-heated 450 degree F. oven for about 10 minutes or until golden brown. Cool.

Have the cream cheese at room temperature, beat and combine with the ½ cup sugar, mixing until smooth. Add the eggs, one at a time beating well after each addition. Stir in the lemon juice. Spread this mixture over the baked and cooled crust. Spread with preserves . . . strawberry, raspberry, peach, apricot or fruit of your choice.

You could bake this dessert pizza in a jelly roll pan or in 2 round or square pans. These shallow, tart-like pizzas are delicious and so easy to serve.

TAKE THE VEIL

DEAR HELOISE:

Here is a smart idea:

If you are about to leave for church and find your chapel veil is wrinkled or soiled and you don't have anything else to wear on your head, try my method.

Rinse your veil in some nice suds, give it a sharp shake and lay it on four paper napkins or a few paper towels. Place some more toweling on top and rub it with your hands.

In two minutes you have a fresh, clean and dry veil.

I do not know what your chapel veil was made of, but those who find themselves in this predicament can also lay it between two bath towels after washing it.

Roll up the bath towels (about this time it will look like a rolling pin) and hit it with your hand. The bath towels will absorb all the moisture.

This way you can put it on immediately.

A NEW LEAF

DEAR HELOISE:

When selecting a pattern from various fashion books, I have noticed nearly everyone licks their finger to turn the pages, which I have always thought most unsanitary.

When my rubber gloves wear out, I cut off the good fingers and I take one along in my handbag. Then when I need to flip through a pattern book, I just slip this on my finger, which enables me to turn the pages easily.

Mrs. K. M. S.

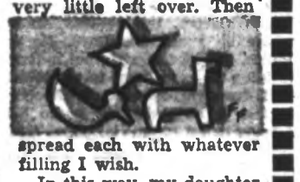

STAR THIS ONE!

DEAR HELOISE:

I'd like to share this idea with mothers who may have a youngster who just does not like sandwiches and often brings them home again with one bite out or not touched at all.

I put two pieces of plain bread together, then take my various cookie cutters and cut out small sandwiches in different shapes.

I can usually get a horse, duck and a star out of two pieces of stacked bread with very little left over. Then spread each with whatever filling I wish.

In this way, my daughter eats three sandwiches and is the center of attention at lunch time.

And what about those leftover scraps? Just the thing for Mama's quickie lunch — what else? Or to store away in the freezer for dressing, bread pudding, etc., at a later date.

By CECIL CLARK

But, to quote Maxwell Smart, would you believe Winnipeg as a source of master minds? Not that we have anything against Winnipeg, but, gosh, it's so out of character.

Whether it's fact or fiction, usually when you relax with a good spy story you find one of the master minds is either an Englishman, a Russian or a German. Depending of course on the era, and the sales slant.

Winnipeg Is Canada's Source of Master Minds

Yet, strange to relate, in the last war two of Britain's stealthiest behind-the-scenes operators came from good old Portage and Main.

I was reminded of this the other day, talking with my old ex-police friend and Cadboro Bay neighbor) Ernie Bavin. When I say old friend you can take that both ways. He's 82 and I've known him 45 years.

Anyway, in the last four years of his three and a half decades of police service, Ernie got himself involved in the shadowy world of spy and counterspy. But being a retiring sort of bloke with always an evasive smile, he doesn't enlarge much upon it. Which, from a journalist's point of view I find somewhat frustrating.

However, as we chatted in his living room the other afternoon he suddenly dug up from somewhere a little booklet which he tossed over to me.

It turned out to be a printed transcript of a CBC interview with Sir William Stephenson, on the back of which I caught the pen and ink message: "A reference to activities in which you were much involved. Trust all goes well with you . . . with affectionate greetings and good wishes . . . W.S."

There was a return address: Camden House, Camden N. Paget, Bermuda.

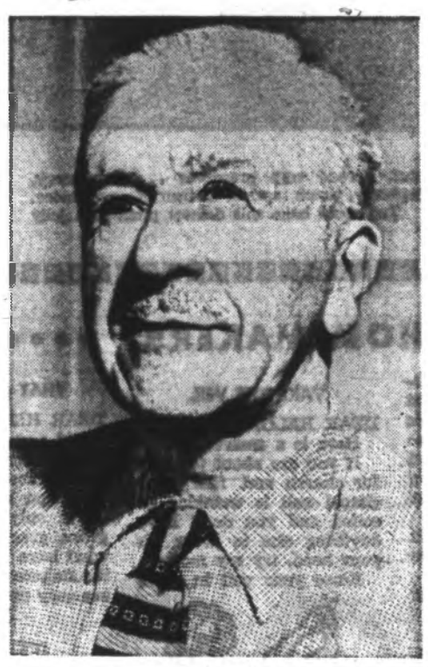

I cottoned right away to the "W.S." — Ernie's one-time boss in the cloak and dagger business. Identified, if you remember, as The Quiet Canadian in the recent best seller of the same title.

Apparently Stephenson and Bavin came together at the latter end of Ernie's police career. Which started, by the way, in London in 1908 where he joined the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. Shipped straight out to Regina, soon after training he went down in the books as Regt. No. 4719. He went overseas in the First World War (artillery) and wher he came back discovered Alberta had a provincial police force.

So he joined the APP as a constable. A year later he was sergeant major, and a year after that he was inspector. Which means they either took on a very brilliant recruit, or there was a helluva big turnover! Time indicated the former.

When the RCMP took over the APP (in 1932) Ernie found himself back in red serge. In the course of time promotion drifted him towards Ottawa where he was chief preventive officer. A few months before the outbreak of the Second World War he became superintendent in charge of the intelligence and liaison section.

On this job, his travels occasionally took him down to Washington, D.C., usually to confer with FBI Chief John Edgar Hoover. Which finally resulted in a link-up with the mysterious Mr. Stephenson, then living in a penthouse in the Dorset Hotel in New York. The rent of which Mr. S. paid out of his own pocket, for not only was he a patriot but also a millionaire.

ERNIE BAVIN
. . . evasive smile.

SIR WILLIAM STEPHENSON
. . . quiet Canadian.

Upshot of all this was that Ernie went to work for British Intelligence in New York City.

Stephenson's background makes an interesting story. Born in Winnipeg, it was soon after he left high school (during the First War) that he went over to Britain and joined the Royal Flying Corps, predecessor to the RAF. He must have been pretty good, for among those he knocked out of the air was Baron Manfred von Richthoven's brother, Lothar.

Stephenson stayed in Britain after the war and when the BBC started broadcasting (with the call sign 2LO) he naturally figured a lot of people would want to listen. So he manufactured radio sets. From this start his financial empire pyramided until he became a millionaire.

Occasionally on his business trips through Europe he noticed (perhaps earlier than others) that in the offing was a day when Hitler's antics would mean a shooting war. Scraps of his information he now and again imparted to his friend Winston Churchill.

Which is probably why, when the balloon finally went up, Churchill assigned Bill Stephenson to New York to handle British intelligence on the U.S. Atlantic coast, but immediately responsible to the British ambassador in Washington, Lord Lothian. Cover name for Stepehenson's operation was the British Supply Commission.

Then along came the twin disasters of Dunkirk and the fall of France, when U.S. opinion was divided as to whether to send arms to Britain or cross the island kingdom off as a dead loss and prepare to defend fortress America.

Among strong proponents of the latter course was that rare old Fenian, U.S. Ambassador Joe Kennedy (father of the Kennedy clan) and the one-time Atlantic flier, Charles Lindbergh. What with getting a medal from Herman Goerring, and a close up of the Luftwaffe, Charlie was frank enough to tell the U.S. public that the Germans were unbeatable.

All this was pretty enervating, but it turned out that Mr. Stepehenson, the man from Winnipeg, was a pinch-hitter of no mean ability.

For one thing he had made a lot of friends. In particular the one-time U.S. General William J. Donovan. In fast time Stephenson took Donovan to England, arranged for him to meet not only the Royal Family, but also Winston Churchill and the Cabinet, then took him around the country to show him what the atmosphere was like.

Donovan came back enthused with the British spirit and (Stephenson writing his speeches) gave his views on radio from coast to coast.

It was Donovan, in fact, who was mainly responsible for the "destroyers for bases" deal consumated a month after his return from Britain. Though they called the one-time Medal of Honor winner, Wild Bill, in real life Donovan was a quiet and gentlemanly patriot, who, when the chips were down, proved to be one of Britain's greatest friends.

Later on, it was at Stephenson's suggestion (to President Roosevelt) that the U.S. established a real intelligence service. Called the OSS (Office of Strategic Serivce). Wild Bill was in charge.

In the meantime the Atlantic coast of the still neutral U.S. was the scene of some big spying and counter-spying with Stephenson's agents quietly proving their worth. With the U.S. not yet at war, only people they could rely on for co-operation was John Edgar Hoover and his FBI.

The G-men on their part were often astonished at the slickness of the British operation, and I believe that some of their top men went through the British school at Bermuda. One English woman there, so they tell me, could open any letter, no matter how gummed, pasted, sealing waxed or rivetted, without trace of tampering.

This was necessary for the main part of Stephenson's job was the interception of coded or cryptic messages, usually relating to the departure of shiploads of war material from New York docks.

Someone once figured that Stephenson's efforts saved a thousand lives and a half a million tons of shipping during Atlantic crossings.

Of course it wasn't all letter opening. One of the group's outstanding feats was when operator "Cynthia" made friends with the Italian naval attache at Washington. So friendly were Cynthia's soft arms around the attache's neck, that she finally got the combination of the Embassy vault.

A day or two later, in dead of night (with a watchman safely deployed) another Stephenson operator climbed the embassy wall, got into the building, opened the safe and came away with the Italian naval code. Which of course proved of immeasureable help to Admiral Cunningham in the Mediterranean.

You can imagine with this sort of thing going on, by the time bombs fell on Pearl Harbor and the U.S. military intelligence got into the act, they found Mr. Stephenson a veritable fountain of knowledge ... about the internal enemies of the U.S.

He didn't forget his old standby, John Edgar Hoover. On Stephenson's recommendation Hoover was honored by Britain as a Knight Commander of the British Empire. Which was about the time that Winston Churchill figured that Bill Stephenson deserved a knighthood.

It was after talking this over with Ernie Bavin that I thought it a strange coincidence that another Winnipegger played an equally valuable behind the scenes part in the allied war effort.

The parallel case was that of Charlie Goodeve who, after finishing high school in Winnipeg, plumped for the RCNVR.

Came the great day when his weekend drills paid off and he found himself one summer afternoon a lieutenant on the bridge of the destroyer Patrician at Esquimalt. After that he too went over to England to serve in a variety of RN ships, both big and little. Finally, in 1939, he found himself boss of a quiet little nook in the Admiralty where people experimented with weaponry. Some of which was pretty strange and weird. Like for instance the problem of the magnetic mine, which Goodeve solved by degaussing ships. He also had something to do with skipping bombs on water (for the Mohn dam job) and experimented with shooting piano wire in the air to intercept low flying aircraft.

I think it was just before the war that Goodeve managed to snag the plans of the Oerliken gun (from a Swiss factory) and saw to it they were made in Britain. To do this he had to virtually steal a vacant factory, which Beaverbrook had earmarked for aircraft assembly. Just a case of one Canadian outfoxing another!

It's curious to note that both Stephenson and Goodeve found, on occasion, strong support from Earl Mountbatten. Mountbatten was the only officer in the navy who thought the Oerlikon gun had merit ... and Stephenson once referred to Mountbatten as "the greatest living Englishman."

Goodeve's backroom boys (who seemed to have labs. all over the country) mastered the challenge of "Pluto," the giant undersea pipe that conveyed gasoline from Britain to France for the Normandy invasion. They also had a big part in developing "Mulberry," the floating docks that took the troops and material ashore after D day.

A quarter of a century after these stirring events, with both the Winnipeg boys knighted, it's interesting to know they are still going strong. One in Bermuda, the other in London. In fact, Sir Charles Frederick Goodeve, OBE, FRS, and so on, and so on, is today one of the world's leading authorities on iron and steel and the holder of doctorates of science from the universities of Manitoba, London, Sheffield and Birmingham.

They came a long way, this pair ... from Portage and Main!

Another thing desirable and needed in the new club is the work of an experienced player.

A first activity ought to be a club tournament, to establish a comparative rating.

It is a splendid help and inspiration to all members to have an outside player of high calibre invited to furnish good competition, give simultaneous displays or deliver lectures on the rules and rudiments of the game.

A word of warning from super-organizer MacAdam: "Once you're bitten by the chess bug everything a person has cherished goes by the board. You'd get out of bed or leave a meal to play a game of chess."

And he's not far out there — chess players have been known to go at it for as long as 10 hours, forgetting about food and everything else.

Actually, that's the kind of indomitable spirit that's been guiding Daniel MacAdam since his arrival in Victoria.

He's always on the go, always working on new ideas connected with the foundation, senior citizens' chess clubs, school chess, and what have you.

He's a perfect example of a senior citizen who refuses to let his age run him ... as young at 85 as he was several decades ago.

And in that, he epitomizes Victoria, the city of people who refuse to grow old.

quietly proving their worth. With the U.S. not yet at war, only people they could rely on for co-operation was John Edgar Hoover and his FBI.

The G-men on their part were often astonished at the slickness of the British operation, and I believe that some of their top men went through the British school at Bermuda. One English woman there, so they tell me, could open any letter, no matter how gummed, pasted, sealing waxed or rivetted, without trace of tampering.

This was necessary for the main part of Stephenson's job was the interception of coded or cryptic messages, usually relating to the departure of shiploads of war material from New York docks.

Someone once figured that Stephenson's efforts saved a thousand lives and a half a million tons of shipping during Atlantic crossings.

Of course it wasn't all letter opening. One of the group's outstanding feats was when operator "Cynthia" made friends with the Italian naval attache at Washington. So friendly were Cynthia's soft arms around the attache's neck, that she finally got the combination of the Embassy vault.

A day or two later, in dead of night (with a watchman safely deployed) another Stephenson operator climbed the embassy wall, got into the building, opened the safe and came away with the Italian naval code. Which of course proved of immeasureable help to Admiral Cunningham in the Mediterranean.

You can imagine with this sort of thing going on, by the time bombs fell on Pearl Harbor and the U.S. military intelligence got into the act, they found Mr. Stephenson a veritable fountain of knowledge ... about the internal enemies of the U.S.

He didn't forget his old standby, John Edgar Hoover. On Stephenson's recommendation Hoover was honored by Britain as a Knight Commander of the British Empire. Which was about the time that Winston Churchill figured that Bill Stephenson deserved a knighthood.

It was after talking this over with Ernie Bavin that I thought it a strange coincidence that another Winnipegger played an equally valuable behind the scenes part in the allied war effort.

The parallel case was that of Charlie Goodeve who, after finishing high school in Winnipeg, plumped for the RCNVR.

Came the great day when his weekend drills paid off and he found himself one summer afternoon a lieutenant on the bridge of the destroyer Patrician at Esquimalt. After that he too went over to England to serve in a variety of RN ships, both big and little. Finally, in 1939, he found himself boss of a quiet little nook in the Admiralty where people experimented with weaponry. Some of which was pretty strange and weird. Like for instance the problem of the magnetic mine, which Goodeve solved by degaussing ships. He also had something to do with skipping bombs on water (for the Moehn dam job) and experimented with shooting piano wire in the air to intercept low flying aircraft.

I think it was just before the war that Goodeve managed to snag the plans of the Oerliken gun (from a Swiss factory) and saw to it they were made in Britain. To do this he had to virtually steal a vacant factory, which Beaverbrook had earmarked for aircraft assembly. Just a case of one Canadian outfoxing another!

It's curious to note that both Stephenson and Goodeve found, on occasion, strong support from Earl Mountbatten. Mountbatten was the only officer in the navy who thought the Oerlikon gun had merit ... and Stephenson once referred to Mountbatten as "the greatest living Englishman."

Goodeve's backroom boys (who seemed to have labs. all over the country) mastered the challenge of "Pluto," the giant undersea pipe that conveyed gasoline from Britain to France for the Normandy invasion. They also had a big part in developing "Mulberry," the floating docks that took the troops and material ashore after D day.

A quarter of a century after these stirring events, with both the Winnipeg boys knighted, it's interesting to know they are still going strong. One in Bermuda, the other in London. In fact, Sir Charles Frederick Goodeve, OBE, FRS, and so on, and so on, is today one of the world's leading authorities on iron and steel and the holder of doctorates of science from the universities of Manitoba, London, Sheffield and Birmingham.

They came a long way, this pair ... from Portage and Main!

FAMOUS SPORTS PERSONALITIES WHO HAVE BEEN AMONG US

By ARCHIE H. WILLS

In recent years, prize-fighting or boxing, whichever you prefer, has been wrapped in dirty linen, but, in the early days of the century, it was considered "the manly art of self-defense" and the heavyweight champion of the world walked tall among us. One of those attractive characters was Robert Fitzsimmons and he paid a visit to Victoria.

"Ruby Robert," as he was affectionately dubbed, became a British hero when, at Carson City, Nevada, on March 17, 1897, he won the heavyweight crown by defeating the gentleman of the ring, Jim Corbett.

He was 34 at the time and had been denied a previous shot at the title because of his size. Although he was six feet tall he only weighed between 163 and 170 pounds for his heavyweight fights. Opponents like John L. Sullivan, the Boston strongboy and the terror of the 1890s, and Jim Jeffries, who fought at 210 pounds, were giants alongside him.

Fitzsimmons was born in Cornwall, England, and went to New Zealand at an early age, where he built up a big reputation as a fighter. One night he knocked out four men in a row and followed it up by dropping five the next night. He moved to the United States and, as his weight increased, he won titles in different divisions, including the world's middleweight title.

Although he had the height, his well formed torso was supported by two spindly legs. He moved fast on his feet and relied on what became known as the Solar Plexus Punch, which was delivered to the pit of an opponent's stomach.

When he was kidded about his lack of weight for a heavyweight bout, he retorted: "The bigger they are, the harder they fall."

However, when he met Jeffries on June 9, 1899, he was knocked out in the 11th round. He was still a great attraction and tried his hand on the vaudeville circuit.

Although it was after the turn of the century when he came to Victoria and I was a little shaver, I vividly recall my impressions of this unusual man. Like all the other kids of that time, I spent much time downtown on the lookout for Fitzsimmons. My father took me to see him in the Pantages Theatre, which was a great treat.

The Pantages was located on Johnson Street, where Graeme Scott now operates Jeune Bros. It was situated in a block which had 10 saloons, beginning with the one in the Victoria Hotel at the corner of Johnson and Government Streets, where we now pay our B.C. Medical Plan bills, and running west to the corner of Wharf Street, where the Queen's and Occidental Hotels had long, well-stocked bars.

When the sign was given for Fitzsimmons to take over the stage, this freckled-faced, balding redhead came out of the wings, shadow boxing. He wore full-length tights and the tops were cut to show his powerful shoulders, with their rippling muscles. He carried on an amusing line of chatter and then moved to the punching bag, which hung suspended from its raised platform.

Fitzsimmons warmed up with light punching, using his gloved hands and elbows, then he increased the tempo and the place rocked under the power of the blows. The punching bag became a blurr as it smashed from side to side. Then with a ferocious blow with his right hand, the one which delivered the solar plexus punch, he severed the cord holding the bag in the swivel and it sailed out into the audience, which arose as a man and thundered its admiration.

Fitzsimmons stayed at the Driard Hotel, corner of Broad and View Streets, now part of Eaton's complex. I recall being in the lobby of the hotel with some other kids, when the great fighter went to the desk clerk and asked for his bill. We crowded close and watched him pull from his pants' pocket a large roll of greenbacks, which in the saying of that time, was "big enough to choke a horse." None of us had seen so much money before. He peeled off the bills as if he were peeling a banana and tossed a $5 bill to the clerk as a tip.

Two other heavyweight champions who had been in the headlines in 1908 were visitors to Victoria: Jack Johnson and Tommy Burns. They were on their way home from Australia, where Johnson had relieved Burns of the title.

After Jim Jeffries had retired undefeated, Burns, who was a Canadian and whose real name was Noah Brusso, met and decisioned Marvin Hart in a 20-round bout labelled "for the world's heavyweight title."

There were only a couple of good heavyweights around at that time and both were Negroes, Johnson and Sam Langford, the "Boston Tar-Baby." But Negroes, referred to as "niggers," were not wanted in white men's territory. Johnson pursued Burns for a fight and, when a group of Sydney promoters offered a purse of $30,000 he signed for what proved to be one of the most one-sided fights in ring history.

Burns, who had plenty of courage, was not a true heavyweight as he stood but five-foot-seven and weighed 175 pounds. Johnson, on the other hand, was six-foot-one and weighed 200 pounds. He had an amazing physique, was fast of foot and could hit with tremendous power with either hand.

The pair met in the Sydney Stadium on Boxing Day, 1908. In the 14th round Burns, still game but cut to ribbons, refused to hit the canvas and the referee mercifully halted the fight.

Johnson was a classy dresser, a fine looking man with some gold showing in his teeth, and requested a motor car to take him from his ship at the Outer Wharf to the Driard Hotel. I was among those who crowded about him. Looking back, it was his victory which really brought on the development of blacks in athletics. Usually, the credit is given to Jackie Robinson, when he appeared in a Brooklyn uniform and broke the taboo against black players in baseball.

Johnson failed to get the admiration he so eagerly sought because he lived fast, and there was a great cry throughout the world for a "White Hope" who would bring the title back to the white man. But we had to wait a long time until the ponderous Jess Willard defeated Johnson, then a shell of a man, in the 27th round in Havana, Cuba, on April 5, 1915. He was killed in an auto accident in 1946.

Burns arrived here on a later boat from Australia and I remember my surprise at his lack of height and realized why he had been an easy touch for Johnson. Burns, though white, lacked the personality of Johnson.

Another heavyweight champion visited Victoria some years later and, to me, he was the smartest and most intelligent of them all, Gene Tunney.

We were sitting around the newsroom after putting the paper to bed on a March afternoon in 1927 when a phone call told us that Gene Tunney, who had won the world's heavyweight title from Jack Dempsey on Sept. 23, 1926, had arrived on the boat from Seattle at 1 o'clock.

The heavyweight division was at the zenith of its fame then, with million-dollar purses and such figures as Tunney, Dempsey and Georges Carpentier, the Frenchman. A champion, such as Tunney, was big news, not only for the sports pages, but for a much wider readership, due to the fact that he had developed a correspondence with Bernard Shaw and was regarded as a phenomenon in the prize-ring, an intellectual.

Our staff fanned out over the city to try and run Tunney down. The haunts that the general run of prizefighters would frequent were quickly covered.

I had a hunch that, if this much-publicized intellectual phase of Tunney's was not so much baloney from a wild-eyed publicity agent, then the champion would likely go to the provincial library, which had a world-wide reputation. So I headed for the legislative buildings and, sure enough, there was Tunney among an admiring crowd of legislators, who were attending a session of the legislature.

John Oliver was the premier at that time and he greeted Tunney and took him on to the floor of the House, where business was interrupted until all members had shaken hands with him.

I had a chat with Tunney and discussed his victory over everyone's favorite, Dempsey. He had won a decision, which did not go down too well with the masses who regarded Dempsey, The Manassa Mauler, as the greatest fighter in the world. Tunney said he would be glad to meet Dempsey again and this was arranged for Sept. 22, 1927, when Tunney won again in a bout, which is remembered for "the long count," which saved Tunney when he had been floored by Dempsey.

I asked Tunney why he had never married and he was quick with his answer.

"If I were married now I would have to be bothering about my wife's baggage and seeing she was being taken care of," he said. "Being single I can get about more easily. But, when the time comes, I will marry."

Tunney, whose Spartan life was admired by all, said he frequently lectured at universities and the question of sex came up frequently as it does today. Tunney was frank about this, as well, and told the students, that Nature can take care of that phase of a man's life.

I asked him about his future in the ring.

"I am fighting to make money and when I have what I consider sufficient I shall leave the ring, marry and settle into business and will have nothing to do with the ring, except to see a few fights," was his answer.

True to that statement, Tunney, when he defeated Dempsey a second time with a million dollars at stake, retired undefeated.

I have met many fighters in my day and I regard Tunney, as the best of them. He was not the greatest fighter but he combined many other attributes which made him stand out in that combative circle.

Now, let us swing to tennis and meet a few of the luminaries that really lifted the game from an easy going affair into the hard-swinging, fiercely-paced game it is today.

The two biggest names to appear on Victoria courts were Bill Tilden and Bill Johnston, a pair of vicious racquet-wielders, who reigned back in the early 'twenties. Tilden was "Big Bill" and Johnston "Little Bill."

The Davis Cup, emblematic of world-wide supremacy, was held "down under," and the Americans had challenged for it in 1920. Tilden and Johnston were to carry the burden for the U.S. and in order to get to meet the Australian team they had to catch a boat in Victoria. Their visit was seized upon by the Victoria Lawn Tennis Club as a chance for an exhibition match.

Fortunately, at that time, Victoria had a very good player in Bernie Schwengers, who was the Canadian men's singles champion and a member of the Canadian Davis Cup team. Owing to the time of year, it was impossible to play outside so, arrangements were made with the military, for the use of the armory. A court was laid out on the asphalt floor and the huge building was crammed with curious spectators who wanted to see "The Two Bills" from the U.S.

Despite poor lighting and, competitors who were not in their class, Tilden and Johnston gave an inspiring display. Tilden's slashing serve was a revelation. When they played in the Davis Cup finals "down under," the two Bills, swept the series, taking all five games. The U.S. retained the Davis Cup until 1927, when the Frenchmen, Lacoste and Borotra, won it.

At that time tennis was on the upswing and the first touring pros appeared, headlined by the temperamental Suzanne Lenglen, of France, who let the world know that women deserved a place in the court firmament.

She came to Victoria to appear in an exhibition, which was staged in the old Patrick Arena in Oak Bay. The ice machines there could not change the surface quickly and the promoters laid boards over enough ice to provide a playing surface and covered them with canvas. When Suzanne saw what she had to play on she let the promotors know of her displeasure. It was a question whether or not the exhibition would proceed as Suzanne, who knew her way around in the business world, refused to appear unless she had her money in advance. This was a wise precaution as there was some doubt as to whether or not there would be sufficient gate receipts to meet all the expenses.

Suzanne was then setting a new style for women on the courts, refusing to abide by the so-called rules of decency, in particular, long skirts.

She appeared on the court wearing a pleated skirt just below the knee, had a bandeau around her head and wore a feathered boa, about as long as some of these outlandish scarfs which Oak Bay residents are accused of wearing when they hide behind the Tweed Curtain. This she removed before serving up the ball to a very sweet Mary K. Browne, who was about the best of the U.S. women players. Suzanne always over-powered her opponents and off-the-courts she set new fashions for women.

I recall paying her a visit at the Empress Hotel, where she was enshrined in all the comforts demanded by a queen. I was well aware of her explosive temperament but a newspaperman is used to that. When I knocked at the door of her room she called out for identification, then opened the door cautiously.

I was surprised to find, at close quarters, that she was not a pretty woman, but, when she invited me in I was able to study her more closely. It was apparent that her lack of good English was a handicap and that she was all business, being shrewd enough to know that she, as a tennis queen, had something of value to sell to the mad "Twenties." North America held little attraction for her, outside of dollars, and she was anxious to get back to France.

She tolerated interviews because it was part of the business and she was polite. But, there was always lurking in her penetrating eyes, the possibility of hasty reaction if the questions irritated her. While not a popular idol, her aggressive style on the courts packed the stands at Wimbledon and wherever she appeared, even in Victoria.

A number of prominent golfers have visited Victoria over the years and the four which impressed me were the English pair, Harry Vardon and Ted Ray, the elongated Jim Barnes and the irrepressible Walter Hagen, a playboy if there ever was one.

Vardon and Ray played over the Oak Bay course many years ago when they were at the height of their game and when the Vardon grip was the one the pros taught the beginners. Vardon and Ray were unfamiliar with the Oak Bay course, but being champions, they tried shots which were unfamilar to the many spectators who followed them around.

When they came to a dog's-leg fairway with a wooded area in the turn to the left, Vardon disregarded the advice of his caddy to play safely straightaway and get a clear second shot to the green. Vardon took a stance which showed he intended to drive over the trees, something unheard of.

The spectators watched the ball sail away with a good lift, over the trees and on to the fairway. Naturally, there were cheers, but not many of the amateurs who plodded the course tried to emulate this feat.

"The Hage", as Walter Hagen was often referred to, came to Victoria by ship from Australia, where he had been on an exhibition tour. I recall boarding the ship with other newsmen. We hastened to his stateroom where, somewhat dishevelled, he said: "I've had a bad night." We knew this wasn't unusual for him as he was well known for his playboy activities.

Hagen did much to improve and popularize golf and it was with regret that we learned of his death in October, 1969. He was probably the most loveable personality the game has known and, to many, he was the greatest golfer of all time. Everything came easy to him and his style, both on and off the course was smooth and attractive. He was a stylist in his dress.

Probably the most unusual golfer to visit Victoria and play over the Oak Bay course was Long Jim Barnes, who was capitalizing on his win in the British Open.

Barnes, no dapper gent on the course, shocked the large gallery when he teed off at the first hole. He was wearing "longs," full-length cream flannel trousers, slacks we call them today. The male spectators were dolled up in their "bloomers," which, so as not to be confused with certain women's apparel, were referred to by their trade name, "Plus-Fours."

Barnes started a trend and each year more and more golfers discarded the amusing "plus-fours" and adopted the simpler and more comfortable "longs." Today, you hardly see "plus-fours."

Barnes was an easy-going player, who walked up to the ball with the right club, then stepped into it without any "addressing." I remember many in the gallery remarked how easy golf looked when Barnes was playing.

Before telling about one of the most amusing races ever held in Victoria, I might mention that both Frank Gotch, for many years the heavyweight champion in the period before wrestling became a tumbling act in a circus, and Hackenschmidt, "The Russian Lion," were visitors to Victoria and along with an Indian with the name of Chief White Feather, provided large crowds in the old Victoria Theatre, also part of the Eaton complex today, some hectic wrestling bouts.

Hackenschmidt had a marvelous physique and out-rivaled Sandow, who at that time was the strongest man in the world, and had patented spring dumbells and other muscle-building equipment.

In the early 1890s Ned Hanlon, of Toronto, was the greatest oarsman in the world, holding the Canadian, United States and world's sculling championships. He was visiting in Victoria when the best newspaperman who ever worked here, Martin Egan, always on the lookout for a lark or a story, heard that Hanlon had registered into the Burnes Hotel, now in the Bastion Square precinct.

Egan was a close friend of Tom Burnes, one of the sons of Irish Tommy Burnes who operated the hotel. Hanlon bragged a lot about his ability and Egan and Burnes knew of a husky chap, Joseph Schwartz, whose mother was Indian and his father German, and whose job was pulling boats through the rapids at the Gorge. He had tremendous shoulders. Egan and Burnes took him into their confidence, suggesting that he race against Hanlon. They got a shell from the James Bay Athletic Club, which had its boathouse at the end of Menzies Street, and under guidance of the club's coach, Joseph adjusted himself to the narrow confines of the shell and

History in Recipes

THE SCANDINAVIAN COOK-BOOK, by Nika Standen Hazelton; Collier-Macmillan; 243 pages; paperback, $1.50.

Scandinavian cooking is more than smorgasbord and Swedish meat balls. The Scandinavian Cook Book does contain specific directions for setting up a Smorgasbord and other Cold Tables as well as interesting recipes for Swedish meat balls (there are as many ways of making them as there are Swedish housewives).

Scandinavian food covers the food of the Danes, Norwegians, Swedes, Finns and Icelanders. Scandinavian women are great cooks and there seems to be an air of history to their authentic recipes. Most of the food is quite different to North American food.

For those who like to adventure in cooking, this fat little paperback could open up a whole new world of food preparation and serving.

Scandinavian cooking is basically meat and potato cooking which appeals to most men. The desserts are rich, another man-pleasing factor, for in every man there lurks a dessert lover craving to be satisfied. This little book tells you exactly how to make the authentic and world-famous Danish Pastry and many suggestions for toppings for those equally world famous and eye-appealing Open-Faced Sandwiches.

There are recipes for soup, salads, fish, sea food, meat, eggs and poultry, all tested and authentic, all representative of their country of origin.

There are several "How" chapters . . . How the Scandinavians live; How they entertain; How they drink and eat differently than we in North America. Altogether an interesting little book and well worth the $1.50 price tag.—MURIEL WILSON.

New Alice at UBC

A copy of the Dali Alice — a spectacular publication of Alice's Adventures in Wonderland containing 13 original illustrations by Salvador Dali — has been acquired by the University of British Columbia's library.

Published in a limited edition of 2,700 copies, the Dali Alice has been in such demand that distribution was limited to a certain number of copies for each major city. Only 90 were available to Canadian buyers and all were sold well before the official publication date of Nov. 5.

The UBC library's copy is now on display in the special collections division and as visitors are discovering, it is no ordinary book. Instead of being bound together, the text pages and surrealist art work are held in a silk-lined case.

Each of the illustrations is an original Dali creation. Opposite the title page is a color etching representing Alice, and the other twelve illustrations (one for each chapter) are mixed-media graphics: original Dali woodcuts superimposed on colored gravures.

Although the Dali Alice is a striking addition to the library's collection of 200 editions of Alice and Through the Looking Glass, it shares the spotlight with two other volumes.

They are signed by Alice herself — Alice Lidell Hargreaves — for whom the stories were originally written.

THE SHIVERING SANDS, by Victoria Holt; Collins; 318 pages; $5.95.

When the disappearance of her archaeologist sister Roma sent Caroline Verlaine down to Lovat Stacy in an attempt to discover what happened, she found herself caught up in the drama of that ancient house and with the unusual members of the Stacy family.

Why had Roma disappeared? Was it an accident or had she been murdered? And if so was the quest to discover the truth a dangerous one? If she had been murdered, was the murderer in Lovat Stacy? And was he — or she — aware of Caroline's intention? And if so, was Caroline in danger?

With mounting tension she realized that she was. There in that ancient house close to the sea with its windows overlooking the shivering sands, on which on clear days the masts of lost ships could be seen, Caroline became aware that because of her determination to uncover the truth, she was marked out to be the next victim.

Up-Island Doctors Adopt Village of Dennery On St. Lucia Island

reported seeing 110 patients during a day's clinic. The list goes on: Dr. David Vey, July; Dr. Henry Williams, August and September; Dr. G. A. F. R. Gibson was the October volunteer, and Dr. John Cubbage and family from Cumberland were away for Christmas. The 1970 slate began with Dr. G. I. Theal; Dr. A. R. Voth of Burnaby for March and April; Dr. L. T. Chen, May, and Dr. Power, June; Dr. Al McCann, July and August; Dr. W. O. C. Young, Dr. J. Lunam, and Mr. C. Montgomery complete the roster to February, 1971.

To Dr. Power has fallen the task of correspondence for the project, and he instigated a Caribbean File kept at his Comox office. Local organizations such as the Officers' Wives' Club, and the Nursing Staff of St. Joseph's Hospital, Comox, have donated money to the cause, the latest donation of $75 from the Practical Nurses of Comox was presented Jan. 10 of this year. The doctors hold occasional meetings to plan their course of action.

Dr. Kelly of the CMA is loud in praise of the persuasive ability Dr. Power has shown in the organization of the project. In his latest letter he says: "The line-up of volunteers for Dennery is most impressive, and you and your colleagues can truly say that you have adopted the area."

When first approached about this article, the local doctors were inclined to be modest, passing it off as a working holiday and a chance to see another part of the world; but they were all enthusiastic about the terrific history of the islands of the Caribees. These had first been peopled by the Arawaks, who in turn were overcome by the more warlike Caribs, sometimes spelled "Caniba," and from whence comes the term cannibal. The Caribs were thought to come from South America. One must then begin with the discovery of the islands by Columbus, "West Indies" because he thought he had discovered a route to India. Santa Dominica was so called because it was first sighted on a Sunday; Guadeloupe, "Santa Maria de Gadalupe" for the shrine in Spain where Columbus offered prayers prior to his departure.

There followed a struggle for power between Spain, France and Great Britain. St. Lucia alone changed hands 10 times from the mid-1700s, British, French and back to British again, over and over. Martinique, halfway between Dominica and St. Lucia, became the property of France in 1635, was captured in 1762, 1793, 1809 by the British, but each time returned to France when peace was declared. It is the home of the volcano Mont Pelee, which erupted in 1762, 1856, and on May 8, 1902, destroyed the city of St. Pierre with a loss of 30-40,000 people. A lone survivor, a condemned prisoner, was in a deep underground cell. Ash again erupted in 1927 from Pelee, but not drastically.

Martinique is also the birthplace of the Empress Josephine, Napoleon's first wife.

It was in the Dominican Passage that the Battle of the Saintes was fought in 1782 between the British and the French fleets, another case of united we stand, divided we fall, for a trick of wind divided the French fleet commanded by Admiral Comte de Grasse, allowing the British Admiral Sir George Rodney to sail through the gap and attack from both sides. Soon De Grasse struck his colors, and thus Britain gained supremacy in the Caribbean waters.

Captain Bligh, of Mutiny fame, also figures in the history of the West Indies. In 1765 a botanic garden was established at Kingstown. In 1793, Captain Bligh put ashore more than 500 breadfruit plants from Tahiti. His first expedition had failed due to the mutiny. This time his command was HMS Providence. From these saplings grow the abundance of breadfruit found on the islands.

The fertility of St. Vincent has been accredited to the eruption of the volcano Souffriere in 1812. The sulphurous dust that settled over the area has enriched the soil. And it was not an "ill wind" which carried the dust to Barbados, 100 miles to windward, accomplishing a miracle of fertility here as well.

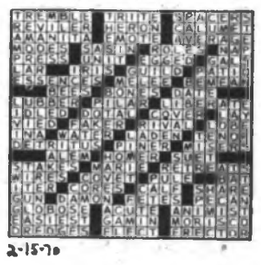

St. Lucia is of volcanic origin. Two spires, Petit Piton and Gros Piton, rise nearly 2,500 feet out of the water. The village of Souffriere nestles at their base. Marigot Harbor is a sailor's delight, well sheltered from storms. The port of Castries was once a crater from a volcano, is now flooded by the sea, and makes a good anchorage for the ships and banana boats calling for cargo. It has had two serious fires, 1948 and 1951, destoying the old buildings and making way for more modern structures.

In the 1968 bulletin of St. Lucia Planned Parenthood Association we find the most serious and far reaching problem in St. Lucia is the high population growth rate.

In 1961, St. Lucia's per capita income of $307 was the lowest in the Windwards and the Leewards, except for tiny Montserrat, with a population of 12,000 as compared to St. Lucia's 86,000. In 1966, a survey shows the per capita rose $33, or $6 a year. This is absorbed by the rise in the cost of living; some foodstuffs have increased 25 per cent.

Compared with other Windward Islands, St. Lucia has the shortest number of road miles, although in size it is the second largest island.

the southeast sandspit, as we could not remain amid the ice for fear of a wind change causing us to be crushed.

Next day, Sept. 2, a southeast wind came up and opened up the ice a bit so at 10 a.m. we made our second attempt to leave, however by 2 p.m. the wind swung round to the west again bringing in the ice and once more we were forced to turn back. Throughout the night a strong westerly gale blew and piled up the ice, thereby compelling us to wait, hoping for a change of wind to open it up again.

Further attempts to get away were made on the 4th, 5th and 6th but we were still unable to break through.

By this time Baychimo was the only ship anywhere near the western Arctic and to clear radio messages I had to work across the high mountains of Alaska to contact some ship or station in the Pacific.

Owing to adverse conditions, and the shortness of the Arctic night at this time of year, I had for the past week or so been unable to make contact and as our situation was becoming serious it was important that communication be established.

On the night of Sept. 11 I sent out the SOS signal to attract attention. Fortunately my calls were picked up by many stations and from then on, thanks to the co-operation of the U.S. Navy stations Cordova (NPA) and Kodiak (NPS), I was able to maintain fairly regular communication.

While anchored under the lee of the sandspit, each day a party would cross the island hoping to find an improvement in ice conditions. Day by day our chances of getting out were dwindling, and Capt. Cornwell began making arrangements to live ashore should we become frozen-in, for we certainly could not stay on a steel ship.

On Sunday, Sept. 20, we got as far as 30 miles west of Herschel, only to be blocked once again and forced to return.

As the mission station at that time was unoccupied in winter it was agreed that some could live there, and Insp. Caulkin kindly offered us more accommodation at the police barracks. The few Eskimo women on the island were busily occupied making skin clothing and sealhide boots (mukluks) for us, and once all hope of getting out was abandoned expeditions would be organized to hunt caribou in the foothills of the mainland mountains, about 10 files or so from the coast.

As the month of September drew to a close, young ice began to form on the sea each night, snow fell, and it seemed that winter was setting in.

Yet the 25th, 26th, and 27th, were beautiful mild days, and on the 28th a party which had crossed the island, returned reporting very little ice and lots of open water. Coming so late in the season this news was hard to believe but Capt. Cornwell, and Capt. Foellmer (the ice pilot) decided that if the wind remained favorable, we would make our final attempt the next day. In the meantime we purchased as many stores as the Post could spare, as a precaution should we become trapped and forced to winter up the coast between Herschel and Point Barrow.

On the afternoon of the 29th, we left Herschel and started off at full speed. By 7 p.m. we anchored 20 miles west of the island as there was quite a lot of ice around and it would be unwise to buck it in poor light.

Early next morning we again started off at full speed, meeting very little ice. By 8 p.m. we were 150 miles from Herschel, and though the wind had become strong westerly, we could not turn back as we were just as liable to be trapped going back, as we were trying to get round Point Barrow.

To be caught in our position would mean abandoning the ship and attempting, inexperienced as we all were, to walk 200 miles along the coast to Point Barrow, or back to Herschel Island, and we all appreciated the spot that we were in.

Throughout the night we continued at full speed, and the next day, Oct. 1, was one day that none of us is likely to forget. The wind had become strong north-west and would be slowly, but surely, pushing down the heavy ice that lay north of Point Barrow. It had now become a race as to whether we could get around Barrow before the ice shut in and cut us off.

Each hour brought us nearer our goal, and toward nightfall large pans of ice were sighted.

Dodging first to port, then starboard, among the floes, our stout little ship plugged steadily into the wind. The engineers and firemen were giving the engine all she could take, and we were making a good 11 knots as against our normal speed of 9½.

With failing light, and blinding snow-laden wind, the man in the crowsnest and officers on the bridge were straining to keep a sharp lookout. About midnight the engines were suddenly stopped, followed by full astern, and ahead of us lay a solid wall of ice, the polar pack, dreaded by all Arctic navigators, for in its relentless grip many ships have been crushed, and many lives lost.

For a short interval we were uncertain as to what our situation really was and thoughts of being trapped entered our minds, when faintly, through the air we heard the howl of a husky dog. Somewhere, not too far away, there was a settlement.

Turning south-west, and steaming slowly along the edge of the ice, a faint glimmer of light appeared, which gradually became clearer till eager eyes discerned the low-lying coast of Alaska, and the settlement, Point Barrow.

By 4 a.m. Oct. 2, we were safely anchored on the western side of the Point. Ahead lay a clear run to the Bering Sea and Pacific Ocean, and we had successfully rounded Point Barrow from the east the latest date on record. It was with great satisfaction that I advised the radiomen at Cordova and Kodiak that we had successfully rounded Barrow, for they had been keenly listening to our progress.

After the excitement of the past few weeks, the story of the rest of the voyage is something of an anti-climax. Oct. 8 to 10 found us once again taking bunker coal at Dutch Harbor, where we were royally entertained by U.S. coastguardsmen, and where I had a lovely piping hot bath at the home of chief radioman Kramer, and some of Mrs. Kramer's homemade pie.

Our passage from there to Vancouver was certainly anything but pacific. For several days we ran into strong south-easterly gales and heavy seas, and as our cargo of furs was light in weight, the ship was high in the water and we took a terrific beating.

However all is well that ends well, and we finally reached the shelter of the inside passage, and on the afternoon of Oct. 22 arrived at Vancouver, where many of our friends were down to meet us.

For the next six years Baychimo made successful trading voyages from Vancouver or Victoria to the western Arctic.

As for me, I had fallen to the charms of a lovely young lady in North Vancouver, and in 1926 I swallowed the anchor, married in beautiful British Columbia, and, to use an out-of-date cliche "lived happy ever after."

became adept at sliding back and forth on the seat.

When they decided that Joseph was fairly good at sculling, even if a bit rough, Martin and Tom planned to intrigue Hanlon into a race. They had no doubts about Joseph's ability to scull for hours and considered Hanlon's lack of condition a deciding factor.

When they approached Hanlon's manager he said there wasn't a man in the world who could give Hanlon a race, leave alone a unknown in Victoria. Then they began to talk about money, of which neither Egan nor Burnes had very much, but there were many sportsmen in Victoria who had plenty and were always on the lookout for some gambling proposal. In the end Hanlon's manager, hoping to pick up some easy money, agreed to race the unknown.

The race was from the James Bay boathouse, under the Johnson and Point Ellice bridges, around Deadman's Island and back. The town entered upon a betting frenzy and nearly everyone lined the banks of the harbor for this "Race of the Century," as it was labelled.

Egan and Burnes hired the fastest horse and a sulky to travel the shoreline and keep tab on the race. By the time the Johnson Street bridge was reached Joseph was two lengths ahead and four lengths ahead at Point Ellice and still rowing steadily and strongly. When they approached Deadman's Island, Joseph was 20 lengths in front.

Joseph led his famed rival across the finishing line by a quarter of a mile. Hanlon was not only exhausted but his manager had lost all his bets and was broke. He couldn't pay his bill at the Burnes Hotel and the good-natured Tommy, in bowler hat and Prince Albert coat, and carrying his headed cane, figured it had been a rollicking day for the old town and cancelled the bill.

Egan, who set some of the traditions of newspaper work in Victoria, along with another famous reporter, Thomas Denny, who was born here, went on to become one of the Associated Press' noted war correspondents, then vice-president in charge of public relations for the huge Morgan financial empire, and still later civilian adviser to General Pershing, commander of the United States forces in Europe in the First World War.

Ten years ago I collaborated with J. Keith Torbert of New York on a biography of Egan. One of his big stories while here exposed a gang of reputed business men in Victoria and Washington and Oregon who were smuggling Chinese and opium into the area in the early 1890s. Maybe I'll tell that story some day.

Victoria's School Children Impressed Vice-Regal Couple

Prior, Mrs. Prior and Miss Prior; Maj. and Mrs. A. W. Jones, Bishop Perrin and Miss Perrin; ex-Lieutenant-Governor and Mrs. Edgar Dewdney; Col. and Mrs. Benson, His Worship the Mayor and Mrs. Charles Hayward, R. B. Powell, Capt. Grahame, aide-de-camp (sometimes his name was given with an e on the end, and sometimes not), Mr. Guise, comptroller of the vice-regal household, and the private secretary.

"Music was furnished for the dinner by the City Band, and His Excellency spoke in high terms of praise of the same, and also of the excellent menu prepared by Mr. John Virtue, the genial mine host of the Mount Baker Hotel."

We noted previously that Col. D. Streamer said how impressed the governor-general and Lady Minto were with the bright good looks and vitality of Victoria's school children.

He compared their ruddy-cheeked robustness and smiling faces with what he called the sallow skins and scanty hair of eastern Canadian children.

The Colonist told of the vice-regal visit to the young people: "His Excellency and Lady Minto visited the High and Central Schools, and awarded their medals to the successful pupils.

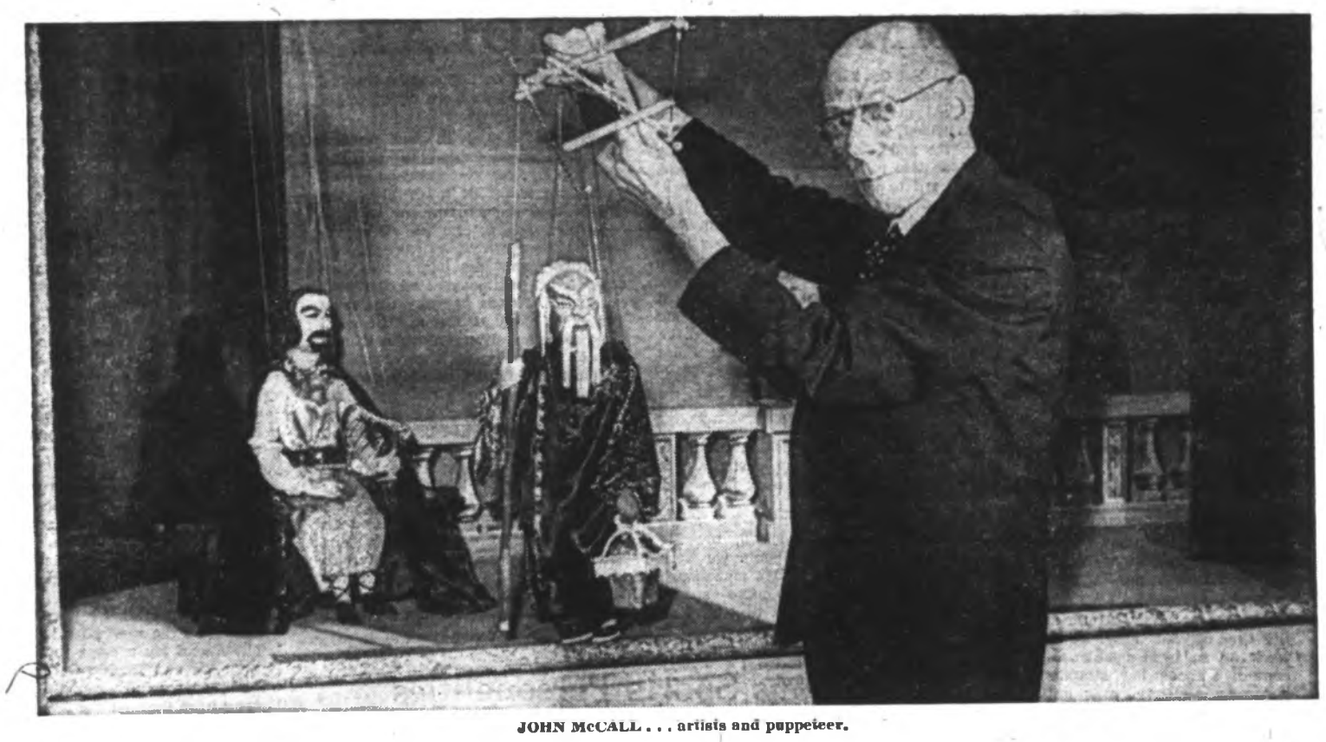

"The pupils assembled in the High School's Pemberton gymnasium. Their Excellencies were received by Hon. J. D. Prentice, minister of education. Among those present were Bishop Perrin, Miss Perrin, Trustee Mrs. Gordon Grant, Rev. Messrs. Sweet and Barber, and F. W. Eaton.

"The much prized silver medal was presented to Miss Chapman, of Principal Paul's division.

"Master J. A. Cunningham, head of the class, had to stay home because he was ill, and the bronze medal was received in his behalf by J. D. Gillies, principal of the Boys' Central School.

Lady Minto was presented with a handsome basket of flowers by Miss Johnson of the High School."

And so the Mintos went away from Victoria. Minto Street in the Fairfield district is named for them, and a famed Okanagan Lake sternwheeler was called the Minto.

JOHN McCALL . . . artists and puppeteer.

Purveyor of Magic

By VIVIENNE CHADWICK

The scarlet curtains slowly parted, and a venerable Chinese stood centre stage. Mustachios. Long satin robe. A tall staff in one hand, a little lantern with blue flames inside, in the other.

In measured, cultured tones he began to introduce the evening's program. The sharp voice of an unseen stage manager broke in, demanding an explanation of the other's unsolicited presence, and there was a brief dialogue.

Both voices were that of John McCall, artist and puppeteer, and the theatre the gallery, at one end of which a stage had been erected, of Whale's Arts and Crafts Studio on Queens Avenue.

It was a short but impressive performance. The introduction scene was followed by a brief comedy involving an elderly gentleman and a mischievous boy; a gypsy dance; a Russian circus scene with more dancers; and, outstandingly effective, the song to the evening star, from Wagner's Tannhauser, which showed the singer in jewelled velvet, on a baleony with a marble balustrade above a midnight sky in which the distant star twinkled with utter realism. The venerable Chinese, his economy of movement a concession to his age, returned to close the production with a signified farewell.

It was all beautifully produced. Backgrounds, costumes, and props had the master touch . . . the result of long years with the major film studios of Hollywood and their infinite capabilities for stage realism.

John McCall, now of 3498 Lovat Avenue, is a Scot, born in Glasgow to a family whose artistic bent he has inherited. His mother had been on the stage, his father was a talented artist, an uncle was a pianist.

He himself has been active in two wars. He went to sea during the first one, at the age of 15, and found he liked the life, so he spent the next 12 years afloat as a radio operator.

His people eventually came out to this continent, and settled in New Jersey. John, when his sea-going years came to an end, found himself a job there as a display artist, which kept him busy until the Second World War came along. This time he joined the air force, but they told him he was too old for combat duty and would be more useful as a teacher. He was brought to London, Ontario, for special training in radar, and this he thoroughly enjoyed. He was later stationed at Virginia Beach.

When the fracas was over, he took his mustering-out pay and came west to Hollywood, ostensibly to visit a friend. However, with his display experience and training behind him, it was no time at all before he landed a good job in the film industry.

This he found wholly fascinating. His field covered everything that had to do with backdrops, scenery, and all related chores. He worked for Samuel Goldwyn, Hal Roach, and Warner Brothers, and the long list of noted players with whom he was associated includes Ingrid Bergman, (making Joan of Arc), Charles Laughton, Marlene Dietrich, John Wayne, Barbara Stanwyck, Ray Milland, and many others.

He seems not to have cared too much for Hollywood itself.

"I couldn't live there," he said. "The moment my working day was over I took off for my home in Glendale."

The busy, happy years went by, until a certain scientific development came along and ruined things for John. Television! He worked for some five years in this, and then decided he couldn't stand it any longer. He was, frankly, unable to bear the commercials! This will come as no surprise to anybody.

At no time in his career had he ever taken on work which he didn't enjoy, purely for the sake of the money involved — and he wasn't going to start with TV commercials! He promptly retired.

It was 1962. Two years later he was in Victoria.

Today, still single — he has never married — he is a member of the talented little group which uses the Queens Avenue studio for all sorts of artistic endeavors. They paint, sculpt, make pottery, teach these things as well, and are now deeply interested in the McCall marionettes.

"We all work together," he said.

Many of them are well-known names in this city. Joan di Castri, Muriel Walsh, Ruby Pearson, Jack Watson, Elsa Evans, Victor Lomas, Josephine Whale, and cabinet-maker George Markland, to name a few. Between them they can certainly put together a truly professional production, and are considering the establishment, says John, of a local puppet guild.

It's to be hoped this aim may be realized, and soon. It would be a worthwhile addition to Victoria's culture, and there are other groups here with experience, notably Grace Tuckey's Puppeteers, and Mervyn Ball's Zingari Puppets.

The next Queens Avenue show is already being planned. It will be a Mexican affair, thinks John, with three characters, a caballero and two peasant children.

This will be good news to those who were present at the recent presentation. Harking back once more to this, I think the highlight was the superb handling of the Tannhauser soloist.

He was posed against a softly-tinted drapery. He rose to his feet from a sitting position with grace and dignity. With a finely articulated hand he gestured during the recorded aria, plucked at the strings of the tiny lute he cradled in his left arm with such exactness that a murmur of admiration ran through the audience, seated himself once more, and, a final gesture that seemed to catch at the imagination of everyone present, so naturally was it made, he reached down, lifted a fold of the velvet robe and brought it across his knees.

This was magic. You forgot it was a puppet. Swift involuntary applause rippled through the house.

Me, I was fascinated. I have seen all sorts of puppets of various types in Cairo, Paris, Japan, and China, and I never remember a bit of 'business' more deftly done. Or a marionette more subtly alive. John makes his own, incidentally, by a special process.

It may have been, on the whole, a modest evening's entertainment, when it came to the time involved. But the potential was obvious, and tremendous.

John McCall is a wizard!

Arab Group Claims Job; Second Plane Hit

Swiss Plane Blasted, 47 Killed

Israelis Angry, Shocked

WUERENLINGEN, Switzerland (UPI) — A Swissair jetliner bound for Tel Aviv was blown up in flight—apparently by Arab guerrillas—moments after taking off Saturday from Zurich's Kloten airport, killing all 47 persons aboard. At least 11 Israelis were among the dead.

An Arab guerrilla organization in Beirut promptly claimed it sabotaged the plane. Swiss authorities, expressing "sorrow and anger," said there was an air explosion before the flaming wreckage of the four-engine Convair Coronado jet plunged to earth in a forest just 200 yards from an atomic reactor and near an ammunition dump.

Swiss federal investigators said there was no sign of a technical fault having caused the explosion. And a transport ministry spokesman, Karl Byland, said: "It looks like sabotage."

Swiss Transport Minister Roger Bonvin, his voice shaking with emotion, went on the radio Saturday night and said:

"If such a disaster was viciously caused by people who do not respect the lives of others, then anger takes its place alongside sorrow — anger over the viciousness, the wickedness of such people."

In a statement issued in Jerusalem late Saturday night, Israeli Premier Golda Meir said:

"The criminal and murderous blowing up of a Swiss plane enroute to Israel, resulting in the death of tens of persons including about 12

Greater Victorians enjoyed springlike weather Saturday as warm sunshine sent thermometers to 55 degrees. Prison Poet Italian Prizewinner

MESSINA, Sicily (AP) — A convicted robber was moved the length of Italy in handcuffs Saturday to receive first prize in a national poetry contest.

Lucio Caselli, 35, whose prison term began in 1964 and ends in August, 1971, will receive the golden plaque of the "amphora of Naxos" poetry contest of Taormina. The award will be made in Messina prison today.

He was transferred here from his cell in a prison at Trento in Northern Italy by train under police guard.

Laotian Forces Disintegrating

Battlefield 'Utter Chaos'

VIENTIANE, Laos (AP) — Swept from the Plain of Jars by an overwhelming North Vietnamese blow, the Laotian government garrison retreated in confusion Saturday with a third of its force dead or missing.

"There is utter confusion and chaos," said a high Laotian army officer. "We do not know where the government units are, whether the wounded are still lying on the plain or whether they have got into the mountains."

The government garrison of 1,500 men based at Xieng Khouang was hit by 6,000 North Vietnamese supported by tanks. By mid-day the northern soldiers controlled nearly all the plain. Officials said more than 500 defenders were killed or missing. North Vietnamese losses were unknown.

Sources in Saigon said United States fighter-bombers from bases in Thailand and Laos' tiny air force flew more than 200 sorties trying to halt the North Vietnamese advance.

In Washington, United States Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield said Saturday recent use of B-52s against targets in Laos "makes it more mandatory than ever" that the Nixon administration permit publication of Senate hearings on U.S. involvement there.

The Montana Democrat said use of the big bombers in an apparently unsuccessful effort to hold a key plain against Communist attacks was an escalation, adding "escalation usually begets escalation."

Military sources in Vientiane reported the North Vietnamese had concentrated 20,000 troops in the area of the plain, 125 miles northeast of Vientiane.

The remainder of the 10,000-man force of Gen Vang Pao, the Labtian commander, was preparing for a bitter stand to defend his headquarters at Long Cheng, 30 miles southwest of the plain.

Premier Prince Souvanna Phouma pledged earlier this week that government forces would hold the plain, which is 50 miles long and 20 miles wide.

U.S. officials had counselled against trying to hold the plain against the strong North Vietnamese forces. They said the plain's strategic value was doubtful and not worth the casualties.

While the plain is of little value to the Laotian government, it is vital to the North Vietnamese. They need it to guard the Ho Chi Minh Trail through eastern Laos over which they send men and supplies to South Vietnam.

U.S. Armor Ambushed

SAIGON (AP) — A North Vietnamese force hiding in hedgerows ambushed a United States armored unit south of Da Nang, killing more Americans than in any single previous battle this year, military spokesmen said Saturday.

In a five-hour battle, 14 Americans were killed and 29 wounded, the spokesmen reported. Four North Vietnamese bodies were found on the battlefield.

Express Races Into News Gap

VANCOUVER (CP) — The black ink wasn't just on the 12 pages of the Vancouver Express which made its debut here Saturday.

It was also on the account books of the Vancouver-New Westminster Newspaper Guild which launched the Express aimed at filling a gap left by temporary suspension of publication of the evening Sun and morning Province.

"We'll be making a profit on the first edition," said Jim Young, president of the guild. "They've been going like hotcakes.

"The reception seems to be very, very good indeed. We've had many favorable comments and we're very, very pleased."

The edition hit the streets six days after Pacific Press Ltd. suspended publication of the two newspapers it produces as a dispute between

Survivors Die In Crash

LAGOS (UPI) — fifty-two persons who survived a train crash at Laganlanga were killed when a truck carrying them from the crash scene to a nearby hospital somersaulted, the Nigerian Daily Times reported.

Higher Pay

Draft End Urged By Probe

Colonist Los Angeles Times Service

WASHINGTON — A special commission recommended to President Nixon Saturday that military pay be promptly raised and the draft eliminated 16 months from now.

Its 11-month study, the commission said, convinced its members that U.S. armed forces can be maintained at levels of up to 3,000,000 men without using draftees.

The group recommended, however, that elimination of the draft on June 30, 1971, be coupled with stand-by authority to use selective service in case of emergency, but only with the approval of Congress.

There was no immediate White House comment on the report. But a return to a volunteer military force would carry out a major campaign pledge by Nixon in 1968.

Swiss Jet Blasted

Israelis, is a deed which must shock everyone."

Mrs. Meir said the Israeli government "will deal with the issue in its meeting tomorrow morning."

The explosion occurred shortly after another blast ripped a hole in an Austrian airliner carrying mail for Israel. The Austrian plane made it safely back to Frankfurt.

In Washington, the U.S. state department said it understood the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, a minor Arab guerrilla organization, had claimed responsibility for the Austrian airliner explosion as well as the Swiss air jet crash.

"Certainly the conscience of the civilized world will be shocked by these claims and outraged should they prove true," the department said in a statement.

Theo Kaesling, head of the federal investigation commission sent to the crash site north of Zurich by the Swiss Aviation Board, told newsmen the pilot reported an explosion at the back of the plane.

"He reported an explosion to the Zurich control tower and added that the smoke was so thick from the fire that broke out that he couldn't see the instruments anymore," Kaesling said.

The Israelis among the crash victims included Hanoch Lev-Cochav, 41, a former director general of the Israeli labor ministry, and Dr. Hanoch Milvitzky, 58, head of the department of chest and heart surgery at Hadassah Hebrew University Hospital.

The popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, a splinter Arab guerrilla organization, said in Beirut its agents had engineered the explosion aboard the Coronado jetliner. A spokesman said the craft was sabotaged "because it had high-ranking Israeli officials aboard."

However, major Arab guerrilla organizations said reports that they were responsible for the crash were "totally untrue." A statement by the newly-formed "unified command" of guerrillas in Amman, Jordan—including the Palestine Liberation Organization led by Yasir Arafat—claimed the reports were meant to cast a slur on the guerrilla movement.

Swiss officials refused to comment on the possibility of sabotage. But they said all luggage had been X-rayed before being loaded onto the plane.

Arab terrorist organizations have been threatening Swiss air with reprisals since the sentencing in December of three Arabs convicted in that attack.

A bomb threat forced cancellation in Rome of an Alitalia Airlines flight to Tel Aviv Saturday, and its passengers eventually left two hours later on another plane.

Losses Double In Forests

SEATTLE (AP) — Vandalism and theft losses in 1969 totalled $120,000 in the national forests of Washington and Oregon, more than double the figures for the previous year, the U.S. Forest Service has announced.

Castor Oil's For the Birds

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — An emergency airlift brought 1,440 bottles of castor oil to St. Petersburg and officials say it's for the birds.

Volunteers cleaning ducks, grebes, cormorants and other water fowl trapped in last week's Tampa Bay oil slick found castor oil was the best substance for washing away the tarry fuel oil that covered the birds' feathers.

Brotherhood

THE Canadian Council of Christians and Jews twig the conscience with a little reminder every year. It's called Brotherhood Week, this year's effort getting underway tomorrow.

It's the week in which the bigots cleanse their souls apply balm to the conscience by doggedly refusing to use epithets they use the 51 other weeks of the year. Oh, they have their endearing phrases to describe the blacks, the Indians and Italians, but somehow or other the main target is the Jew.

I somehow feel that Victorians have missed one of the truly rewarding ethnic relationships that can be found anywhere. Victoria probably has one of the smallest Jewish communities of any major city in Canada. Victorians just don't know Jewish families.

AS A YOUNGSTER in Winnipeg, I formed some fast friendships with Jewish boys and let me tell you one thing, make a friendship with a Jew and you've got a buddy for life. Winnipeg, of course, has a large Jewish community, a close knit, help-the-other-guy rapport that is almost unique in Canadian life today.

You knock the Jew because he makes more money. Blame yourself for not having his dedication, his zeal for making that money. Call a Jew miserly and you're not even close to the truth. I suggest a Jewish friend will go out of his way to see you get an honest shake. "I can get it for you wholesale," contains a lot more fact than fiction and your Jewish benefactor won't ask for anything in return except friendship.

FACTS and figures I don't have to back up my claim that Jewish boys and girls get into less trouble with the law than boys and girls from most other racial groups, but I know it to be true. Live in a city like Calgary, or Winnipeg, or Edmonton, all with large Jewish communities. Check the court statistics and be amazed at the lack of Jewish names on the police blotters. Check the law society scrolls, the medical and dental profession lists, note an inordinate number of Jewish names. They worked their butts off for those shingles hanging outside their offices. Nobody gave them any special favors.

Israel's monumental struggle for existence has drawn admiration from all parts of the free world, but without the fantastic money flow from international Jewry, Israel would never have come into being. The donations are, for the most part, strictly voluntary.

BUT WALK in the caverns of Toronto's financial district and listen to the vituperation heaped on the Jewish head because of the control he exerts in the money markets of the world. He exerts it because of an inbred desire to work hard, to produce, to succeed. Admirable qualities that, in turn, have turned him into a target for bilious abuse.

The Jew, the most persecuted man in the history of the world. Reviled even by the black race, again, because of his monetary station in life. You would think the blacks would look on the Jews as kindred souls. Some do, but too many ape the sick mind of the gentile bigot and they become as much racist as those they despise.

Jackie Robinson, the marvelous Negro baseballer and most definitely an exception to the aforementioned, once spoke at a brotherhood dinner in Calgary and made his point crystal clear with no chance of misquotation.

"THE JEW is my brother," he said. "The gentile is also my brother. I will judge them all individually and never as a group."

I'm sorry, but the cynicism in me forces me to look at the results of Brotherhood Week much as I look on the results of giving something up for Lent.

Be nice to the minorities, the Jews, Indians, blacks, Ukrainians during Brotherhood Week. Then fall back into the pattern of discrimination the rest of the year.

Pollution of the mind—and you don't legislate it out of existence.

Express

the company and five newspaper unions boiled over.

Mr. Young said he expected a sellout of the 100,000 press run of the Express. There were no labor costs involved in the issue which was published without advertising.

"There's no question that we'll sell all we can print," he said. "There is more of a demand than we can meet. Unfortunately we don't have the press capacity."

Mr. Young said Tuesday's edition of the newspaper, which plans three editions a week, will contain advertising and will have 12 to 24 pages.

Picket-Ringed

The advertising deadline for Tuesday ended Friday.

And Mr. Young added that Thursday's edition has sold out its advertising space and will contain 24 pages. The advertising rate is $5 a column inch.

The Express newsroom is located four blocks from the Pacific Press building which has been ringed by pickets since Sunday when the company announced its production halt because of a union work slowdown.

Staff Unpaid

Reporters, editors and printers of the Express are not being paid. Working on the newspaper is considered a "dispute assignment," comparable to picket duty.

The publishers, who identified themselves as "Pugstem Publications Ltd.", said in a front page notice that the Express was "born out of the temporary suspension of the Vancouver Sun and the Vancouver Province."

"The Express is being published to fill the void created by Pacific Press suspension of operations . . . it will die when the problem at Pacific Press is resolved . . ."

The front page also carried three Victoria stories from the provincial legislature, four local stories and three pictures. There were national and international stories inside but no wire service copy.

1,100 Out

In addition to general news, the Express also contained an editorial page, two pages of sport news, a women's page, finance section and two pages of entertainment news and television listings.

The Pacific Press shutdown left 1,100 employees out of work after the company said slowdowns cost it $750,000. Pacific Press has cancelled its contracts with the guild and four mechanical unions.

The contracts expired Oct. 31 but had been kept in force by mutual agreement until publication was supended. The two sides reached substantive agreement on wages but other contract issues remained unresolved after talks broke off in November.

'New Outlook'

A Pacific Press spokesman said he hoped the guild's entry into the publishing business would give it "a new outlook on the difficulties management faces in producing a newspaper."

"We presume they have studied carefully all the ramifications of their actions."

Replied Mr. Young: "We are in a very unpleasant situation and we are just trying to make the best of it."

More Than One Cause

By G. C. THOSTESON, MD

Your Good Health

Dear Dr. Thosteson: What medicine is available to alleviate the discomfort and pain of sinus trouble? I have had allergy shots, which did not help, and an antihistamine which caused dizziness and headache.— Mrs. P.F.T.

Possibly you are looking in the wrong direction when you want "medicine" to solve sinus trouble.

Sometimes medication will solve the problem. Sometimes it won't. "Sinus trouble" can stem from infection, polyps or other growths, allergy, physical defects which prevent the sinus cavities from draining correctly.

Of those four possibilities, you have tackled only one — allergy. (The antihistamines are to subdue allergic response.)

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I have a friend with two children. Neither child is required to wash hands after going to the bathroom. She seems to think her children do not have any germs. Am I too fussy? I will try to look the other way when they don't wash their hands if you think I am. Will you write an article regarding this matter?—N.W.

Yes, look the other way when the kids don't wash their hands. They aren't your children.

Of course fingers pick up germs. And if there are any pinworms in the vicinity, fingers pick up pinworm eggs, but you just make yourself miserable by fretting about somebody else's kids.

They should be taught better hygience.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: My daughter is getting married soon, but she wants to wait before starting a family. Do you think birth control pills would be best for her to take? If so, how soon before she gets married should she start?—Mrs. L.G.

The pill has proved itself very successful for the majority of women. If she decides to try it, she should see her doctor a couple of months before the marriage. It usually takes a cycle or so for sure effectiveness to develop.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: To settle an argument between my dad and me, can pierced ears be grown back by leaving them vacant for a time?—S.L.

Tail Streaks Ahead of Comet

Picture ofTago-Sato-Kosaka comet, named for three Japanese discoverers,, was made by Dr. Guido Munch, astronomy profess at Pasadena's California Institute of Technology, with 47-inch telescope at Palomar's Observatory. At the time comet was 35,000,000 miles from earth and 90,000,000 miles from sun. It's moving from left to right, preceded by gas and dust filaments of the tail being blown ahead of comet by solar winds. Portions of tail shown measures about 3,000,000 miles. (AP)

Against U.S. 'Aggressiveness'

Russia Adds More Missiles

MOSCOW (UPI) — Defence Minister Andrei Grechko said Saturday the Soviet Union is increasing its nuclear missile and other defence capabilities to counter growing "aggressiveness" of the United States.

Grechko made the assertation in a signed article in the theoretical journal, Communist, commemorating Soviet Armed Forces Day. Publication of the journal Saturday followed by one day the claim by U.S. Defence Secretary Melvin Laird in Washington that the pace of the current Soviet missile buildup could leave the United States in a second-place strategic position by the middle of the decade.

Grechko also accused West Germany, Israel and Greece of contributing to world tensions, but he cited the United States as the principal threat to Russia and the Soviet system.

"The aggressiveness of the United States, the biggest imperialist power, has increased," he wrote. To counter the threat, he continued, the Soviet Union is "taking every step for the defensive capacity of our country and the combat preparedness of our army and navy to match the tasks confronting them.

"Strategic rocket troops are today the basis of the defensive might of the Soviet Union," Grechko wrote. But in addition to the development of nuclear rockets and missiles, he continued, emphasis also is being placed on "development of the most up-to-date weapons—nuclear weapons, missiles of different ranges and purposes, highly manoeuverable planes, new tanks and atomic missile submarines."

Kindness Works Better Than Jail

GALLUP, N.M. (UPI) — Instead of throwing intoxicated Indians wholesale into an overcrowded jail, Gallup gave them breakfast and a warm place to sleep off their hangovers Saturday. The result was almost revolutionary.

Instead of the former 200 that used to be packed in the jail, only eight were arrested during the night.

The city's crisis began Feb. 13 when a federal court ordered the detention centre to hold no more than 60 men.

More than 180 prisoners were turned loose, and dozens later lay in the streets.

Learning from that weekend, volunteer groups and city officials worked together to provide shelter and food for the drunks Friday and Saturday night.

"It has shown that these people don't have to be arrested," said a volunteer attorney. "It makes the whole penal system seem very inappropriate for the drinking problem."

Our Principals

Significance His Aim

If Jack Lowther can make school more meaningful to the bulk of students under his control, he'll achieve one of his major aims in life.

Mr. Lowther is principal of Mt. Douglas senior high school — the school in which he began a teaching career that had its origin when he was a student himself.

He was born in Nanaimo and educated first there in schools which, he notes a bit sadly, are now no more; Middle Ward elementary, Thomas Hodgson for Grades 5, 6 and 7; John Shaw through Grade 12.

It was mainly the teachers he had in Grade 10 who decided him on his profession — people he regarded with such respect and affection that they were, in a sense, ideals.

Next came University of British Columbia for four years to gain his BA, followed by a year's teacher-training.

Keenly interested in sports, he specialized in distance running, setting a record for the mile at Nanaimo and winning his letter for cross-country at UBC — so it was natural that he should include physical education among his teaching subjects.

When he first came to Mt. Douglas in 1954 he taught PE and biology (among other subjects) to the student body which then numbered 157. There are now 700.

Lowther

Mr. Lowther remained on the Mt. Douglas staff for 13 years, then was named vice-principal at Mount View senior high. He feels a deep gratitude to his principal there, Robert Huddleston, for the help, guidance and shared experiences of those two years. His appointment to Mt. Douglas came last September.

Through the summers of his teaching years, Mr. Lowther returned to UBC to attain his bachelor's and master's degrees in education.

His hobbies include gardening (he used to show dahlias and chrysanthemums), fishing and swimming. He and his wife, former Nanaimo teacher Betty Lou Geernaert, have four children: Cheryl, 15, at Oak Bay senior; Susan, 14, at Oak Bay junior; Brett and Kathy, 11 and 9, at Monterey.

Most rewarding phase of his work he thinks is being in a position to do something "for the very fine young people we have in our schools."

Mr. Lowther has devised his own "rule of life":

"When you commit an unkindness against another person you commit a greater unkindness against yourself; you become less than you are capable of being." — E.M.S.

Hear it for yourself.

Nothing we can say about the new Electrohome 32-pedal GP-100 organ could compare with an actual demonstration.

We can't adequately describe all the rich tonal variations and crystal sound of this remarkable organ. You'll have to come in and thrill to it yourself.

But we can give you some idea of what to expect.

The new Electrohome GP-100 was engineered in Canada to American Guild of Organist standards, with 32 pedals, three-channel sound system (for reed string, tibia and pedal channels), and eight heavy-duty speakers.

There's more. Exclusive Electrohome "Tri-phonic" tabs, two reverb units, cabinetry by Deilcraft—a host of special features designed with the professional in mind.

We'll have professionals on hand too, to fully demonstrate the new GP-100. Drop in and hear what all the excitement is about.

Comox-Strathcona Farmers Produce for Local Market

'Land Becoming Too Valuable for Farming'

COURTENAY — Agricultural production within the Comox-Strathcona district is primarily for the local market, a recent survey has indicated.

Approximately 30,000 acres within the region are held by farmers, with about 10,000 acres cleared and 5,000 acres in production.

The report indicates that the Campbell River Valley and the Salmon River Valley contain a total of 15,000 acres of undeveloped arable land which could be developed at a moderate cost.

The report also notes that much of that arable land is being utilized for logging. Much of the agricultural land, already in production, could be easily developed for residential, commercial or recreational purposes. The consequence of this is that the land is becoming too valuable to justify the continuing use of it for farming, say P. S. Ross and partners who conducted the survey.

Gross farm income from agricultural production within the region is close to $2,000,000 annually. Of that sum, about $450,000 is for wages for farmers and helpers.

In milk production, gross farmer income is about $1,200,000 or about 55 per cent of the payroll from agricultural production. There are about 1,700 milk cows in the district and, in 1968, approximately 17,500,000 pounds of raw milk was produced.

In addition to the direct benefit to the farmer from milk production, some $400,000 in wages is paid to workers involved in the processing and delivery of milk, says the survey.

Courtenay Dairy, formerly Comox Creamery, and now part of Dairyland, purchases about $1,200,000 worth of raw milk annually from district farmers. After processing and delivery the dairy receives about $2,000,000 in gross revenue.

At present, production of milk in the district is greater than the regional consumption by about 3,000,000 pounds and is worth $3,000,000 annually, the report says.

Vegetable crops are also primarily for local use and total production in the regional district yields about $250,000 in gross farm income. This amount represents a gross income of about $70,000 in wage for farmers and helpers.

Ross and partners state that insufficient sunlight and warmth as well as lack of adequately drained soil make commercial berry crop uneconomical.

The report notes there is no significant broiler chicken production in the district but there are about 20,000 laying hens. Egg production and sales account for gross farm income of $150,000. About $50,000 is realized in wages for farmers and helpers.

There are no self-sustaining full-time livestock farms in the district according to the report.

It states: "Because of the competition between forest, agricultural and residential-commercial interests, with a relatively high agricultural land cost, and because of the transportation disadvantage of the Comox-Strathcona regional district, relative to Victoria and Vancouver markets, it is doubtful that the district will become, at least in the short term, a major exporter of agricultural products.

Candy Stripers' Group Formed

Young Hospital Volunteers Serve Patients at Comox

Photostory
By RUTH MacKELLAR

COMOX — The seed of service is inherent in most young people and needs only motivation for germination.

Two women in Comox have provided such motivation for young teenage girls when they organized the Candy Stripers, a volunteer group which performs an assortment of duties at St. Joseph's Hospital, Comox, all of which help to make a patient's lot more bearable. They also take on duties at the extended care unit at the hospital.

The Candy Stripers' organization is international and not new in Canada, originally being organized in Ontario in 1963. It came to British Columbia in 1967 and at present there are 30 such groups helping in B.C. hospitals. There are five groups on the Island, of which Comox Candy Stripers is one.

Hospital Link

The organization is formed in conjunction with a hospital auxiliary, which appoints two of its members as counsellors. They recruit the girls and act as liason between the hospital administrative staff, nursing staff and the auxiliary.

The girls also form their own group and meet once a month with the counsellors present in the role of advisors.

The hospital auxiliary helps the volunteers by supplying money for uniforms, awards and some even provide a bursary for an outstanding Candy Striper entering the field of medicine or nursing.

Rules Made

Before a girl can become a hospital volunteer, she must have her parents' signature and that of a school counsellor on an application form. References regarding the maturity of the applicant must also be supplied. Each successful applicant receives a set of rules for behavior and dress to which she is expected to adhere.

The girls wear a pink and white big-style dress over a white blouse. At the conclusion of 100 hours of volunteer time, a Candy Striper receives her cap, much the same style as a nurses' cap, but in the pink and white of her dress. Later, after she has given 150 hours, a broad pink velvet band is placed on the cap and finally she is eligible for the pin after 200 hours have been completed. Recently Linda James gained her cap and Susan Longland receive her velvet band.

Waiting List

There are 45 members of the Comox group and five more on the waiting list. The girls find their own way to the hospital, and home again, with some coming from Black Creek, about half an hour from Courtenay and another from Denman Island.

The girls range in age from 14 to 18 and, in addition to duties after school, they serve Saturday and Sunday mornings. A duty roster is compiled so that each girl knows the floor and unit in which she will be working.

Under the supervision of nursing staff, they perform such duties as filling water jugs, tidying bedside tables, reading to patients and helping patients who are using a walker or a wheel chair. They also play checkers with elderly patients and even light pipes for male patients in the extended care unit.

Working in extended care, they perform a host of duties for elderly people, such as brushing hair, moving wheel chairs and generally helping the patients to be confortable.

Some of the girls expressed misgivings about working in that unit but were told they must accept the duties which were assigned to them.

It wasn't long before they learned to enjoy the company of the older patients and from the smiles on the faces of many when a Candy Striper appears, it would seem the feeling is mutual.

One duty which the girls enjoy is preparation of tray favors. For occasions such as Valentine's Day, Easter, and other special times of the year, they make tiny favors which are placed on each tray to brighten the day of a hospital patient.

Two Reasons

Although some of the girls intend to enter the nursing field, this does not apply to all Candy Stripers. Some volunteer just because they enjoy the work and feel a deep sense of reward. Narda Oelrich voiced the opinion that the girls were learning valuable lessons working in an adult situation under orders.

There is a two-fold purpose to the teenage volunteer program.

First aim to give an outlet to the unfolding need of young girls to render service to her fellow-man and secondly, to educate her in a preliminary way in the field of health services so that she can make a wiser choice in deciding her hown future career.

The motivation for service in St. Joseph's hospital was provided by Mrs. Cliff Hazlett and Mrs. Ian Maxted.

RECEIVING CAP after serving 100 hours at St. Joseph's Hospital is Linda James. Mrs. Cliff Hazlett makes presentation.

'Distorted Publicity'

Islands Study Hits Snag

"Distorted publicity" given a UBC computer study of the future of the Gulf Islands last fall was an obstacle to the program's main aims, its director said Friday in Victoria.

"The problem was that the study got too much publicity, and distorted publicity," Dr. C. S. Holling told about 90 persons at the University of Victoria.

"Because of this it came to a confrontation between the engineers and Dan Campbell and that was not my purpose."

The November study said that if past and present land development trends do not diminish, 80 per cent of all first-class recreational land in the Gulf Islands will be intensively developed by 1980.

Municipal Affairs Minister Dan Campbell criticized the report shortly after it was publicized, saying that his decision to impose restrictions on land development in the islands would upset the computer's findings.

Dr. Holling, who directs the UBC Institute of Resource Ecology, said initial work had been aimed at developing the "model" with which the problem could be attacked and that it was hoped future studies would include data from persons involved in formulating government policy.

"Now we are going to move on the next step which involves government policy makers," he said.

Gold River School

Pupils Use Free Time To Study in Library

—Betty Macmillan

Jacqueline Harley, eight, checks books

GOLD RIVER — The library in Gold River elementary school is in constant use throughout the school day by children from kindergarten to Year Seven.

School librarian Arnold Bate says that pupils visit the library whenever they have free time after finishing assignments in their regular classes. He said that not only do they have access to all the books, but also there are record with headphones, film strip projectors and tap records. However, the tape recorders are always used under supervision in classrooms.

Mr. Bate teaches the children how to use the library, how to look up their own information, and how to compile reports. The children are shown how to use the card indexes and other files and how to check books both in and out themselves.

"It is a true learning situation" said Mr. Bate. "They don't come here en mass. The teaching is incidental as it comes. They should have the right to sift out their own information for themselves and not be told."

He added that the library also has a large selection of magazines for children from kindergarten upwards. There are no restrictions regarding silence. "We don't have to have them," Mr. Bate decaired. "They are enjoying the library. There is some noise, but it is a happy noise.

One part of the library to which the children do not have access to is the work room where, Mr. Bate explained, he and his assistant, Mrs. Peggy Cummins, repaired books, and did laminating, etc.

Mr. Bate explained that there were several children who regularly helped in the library, unofficially known as the Library Club.

"There are half a dozen or so of them from different classes and they often come to help us out in their free time." he said.

Courtenay Youth Dies in Crash

CUMBERLAND — A 17-year-old Courtenay youth, Randall Balmer, became the first traffic fatality for 1970 in the Comox Valley area when he died in a two-car crash about 3:40 a.m. Saturday.

RCMP say that the two cars a 1958 model and a 1965 vehicle were both travelling toward Royston on the Royston-Cumberland Road when they went out of control and into a ditch.

There were three people in each car. One is believed to have been driven by John Genge, and the other by Robert Noble, both of Cumberland.

One of the passengers, Gerry Dalton, Courtenay, was taken to Nanaimo General Hospital and is reported to be in good condition.

Police said the names of the other passengers, who are also in hospital but not believed in serious condition, were Ivor Robertson, Douglas Waugh and Robert Noble all of Cumberland.

NORTH COWICHAN — Building permits issued from North Cowichan municipal hall during January decreased to $114,830, as against $248,306 during the same period in 1969.

Municipalities' Request

Letter Urges Hydro Study

The provincial government has been asked to order B.C. Hydro to present its case for an increase in power rates to an independent tribunal, Saanich Mayor Hugh Curtis said Saturday.

Mayor Curtis, speaking as the president of the Union of B.C. Municipalities, told The Colonist from Harrison Hot Springs that a letter was sent to Premier Bennett earlier in the week.

A hearing before an independent tribunal is necessary, he said in the letter, so that British Columbians may know whether or not a rate increase is justified at this time.

The UBCM sent a similar request to Hydro chairman Dr. Gordon Shrum after a recent meeting at which Dr. Shrum told UBCM officials a rate increase should no longer be delayed.

Mayor Curtis told the premier that "before any decision is made unilaterally on rates, the Hydro authority should present its case before an independent tribunal."

"Only in this way," he said, "can B.C. residents understand clearly the accomplishments of the authority in recent years, its responsibilities in the immediate future, and what must be done to ensure its financial stability.

"We believe such a course would be of great benefit to all concerned — the government, the authority, and most importantly the people, Mayor Curtis said.

"Then, if the necessity for increased rates were clearly proved, the step would be much more readily acceptable."

Mayor Curtis said the letter was sent to every member municipality of UBCM for their information.

He is attending a "going-to-school" weekend at Harrison put on by the University of B.C. extension department for new mayors and aldermen.

More than 130 from all over the province are taking part in learning situations such as mock council meetings where they consider requests for rezoning and related municipal considerations.

All members of Saanich council, except Ald. Leslie Passmore and Ald. William Campbell, are attending.

Woman Badly Injured

A Victoria woman was in serious condition early Sunday morning in Chemainus General Hospital following a three-car collision on the Trans-Canada Highway Saturday night that sent five persons to hospital.

The others — a Victoria man, a Duncan man and a Crofton mother and child — were in fairly good condition at the same hospital.

Three other persons, including two Chemainus men and another Victoria man, were uninjured in the crash that occurred shortly before 7 p.m. at the River Road turnoff near Chemainus.

All names were withheld.

REGISTERED TECHNOLOGIST Miss Julie Johnson checks blood supply at Nanaimo Regional General Hospital. Blood bank is set up in refrigerator.

Blood Keeps Moving After It's Donated

Photostory
By ARNOLD OLSON

NANAIMO—Ever wonder what happens to the blood between Red Cross donor clinics?

According the nurses and doctors at Nanaimo Regional General Hospital, the blood does almost the same thing it does in the body—it keeps circulating.

Not in the bottle or even in the refrigerators, but the blood can only be kept as whole blood for 21 days and then it has to be fractioned.

New supplies must replenish the continually depleting supplies and that is the reason there are four blood donor units: one stationed permanently in Vancouver and the other three going the rounds of British Columbia communities, hitting each at least twice a year.

Recently, I had a call from the hospital, advising me there was a serious need for my O negative blood for a transfusion.

Later, after asking about the "serious need" I almost blushed when Miss Julie Johnson, a registered technologist, told me that to the sick any need is serious and blood transfusions are always a matter of life and death.

She said usually A and O groups are in short supply, and the need was especially great because there had been six pints used the previous day.

For direct blood donors, the hospitals all have check lists of people who have given blood in the past. When a pint is needed, their list is compared with that of the most recent local donor drive, to see which donors hadn't given and were available for transfusion services.

That was how my name was selected—I hadn't been able to get to the last clinic.

She said one problem had arisen due to the highly successfull clinic which for the first time, had seen Nanaimo's target reached with more than 1,000 pints were collected.

FEW AVAILABLE

Almost all local donors had given and there were few to call upon for emergencies.

Fred Cooper, Red Cross Donor campaign chairman for Nanaimo, said all blood collected locally was sent to Vancouver where it was placed in the central blood bank, from which community hospitals withdrew their amounts as needed.

The permanent clinic in Vancouver, he said, kept up a flow of fresh blood needed for open heart surgery and other vital operations where the city's larger population could be utilized.

Dr. S. M. Grant said that blood given during a clinic was sent to the central bank where it was "fractioned" by spinning so the plasma separated from the blood. This was taken off, then frozen.

When thawed, another substance was taken from the plasma and the plasma returned to the blood and this is what is used in the hospital blood banks.

BROKEN DOWN

It is this portion that is kept for 21 days. After that period, it is sent back to Vancouver where the plasma is taken, and the rest is sent to Ontario and further broken into component substances.

Dr. Grant said that because of strict pre-donor regulations little blood was ever wasted, which he said is different from the United States, where people are encouraged to give blood for money. He said there, various communicable diseases had to be guarded against.

Computer System 'Regional Leader'

NORTH COWICHAN — Vancouver Island Regional Library, with its computer catalogue system, is considered the leading regional library in North America, Ald. Margaret Robertson told North Cowichan council recently.

Reporting from an annual regional library meeting at Nanaimo earlier this month, she said: "During the past year many librarians from all parts of Canada have visited the regional library branch to gain information regarding the computerized system."

Ald. Robertson also stated that soon a photocopier would be placed at the Duncan branch after a pilot program, carried out at Nanaimo, proved to be successful. Cost per sheet was 10 cents and the copier would enable students to obtain copies from pages of reference books which could not be taken from the library, she said.

Ald. Robertson noted that readership at the Elaine Dobbyn branch, Chemainus, and the Duncan library was up seven per cent over the previous year.

"There will be a regional district concept in the revised Library Act. Where before any two municipalities and one school district could institute a library, now it will be changed to two regional districts."

"However, we have three existing regional libraries, including Vancouver Island, Fraser Valley and the Okanagan where representation is not only from cities and municipalities, but also from the school districts.

"The Vancouver Island Regional Library is extremely satisfied with its existing set-up, and I understand the Fraser Valley and Okanagan groups are of the same opinion."
